126 was agreed that the amount realized thereon should be accepted in full satisfaction of all the claims of the certificate-holders thereunder, and that the said Committee would surrender to the said Commission, in exchange for such amount, the certificates so placed subject to the control of said Commission. And it was further specified in the said agreement of September 18, 1902, that the same should apply to and include all such certificates as might thereafter be deposited with and held by the said Committee under the said contract of July 28, 1898, and that the said agreement should constitute an arrangement and contract between the said Committee acting for the said certificate-holders with the State of Virginia for obtaining a settlement with West Virginia, and that the same should continue binding upon the parties and upon the holders of the certificates so deposited for the three years next ensuing from the date of the said agreement; that is to say, until the 18th. day of September 1905. And the said agreement further provided that the same should be subject to renewal and extension for such further time as might be agreed upon between the parties and to such modification and amendment as might thereafter be agreed upon; and

Whereas, the said agreement of September 18, 1902, was approved by the Hon. William A. Anderson, Attorney General of Virginia, by his endorsement at the foot thereof on the 29th. day of September 1902; and

Whereas, the provisions of the said agreement last named were fully approved and recommended on the 3rd. day of December, 1902, by the Advisory Board referred to in the said contract of July 28, 1898 as appears by the plan of settlement made and approved by the said Committee and the Advisory Board and bearing date December 3rd. 1902, of which plan of settlement publication was duly made as provided in the said contract of July 28, 1898, and no notification whatsoever was given to the said Committee, either directly or through any depository, by any of the holders of the deposited certificates, of their unwillingness to accept the proposed set-127 tlement as set forth in the said plan so published and more than thirty days having elapsed after the said publication was completed, and the said plan of settlement having therefore become complete; and of this fact the declaration in writing of the Committee having been duly made to the only depository under the said contract, to wit Messrs. Brown Brothers & Company, of 59, Wall Street, New York, the said plan of settlement thereupon became effective and final; and

Whereas, it is now proposed under the terms of the said agreement of September 18, 1902, and by way of modification thereof as therein provided, to place more fully and completely under the control of the said Virginia Commission all the certificates aforesaid which had up to that date been deposited, and also all thereafter deposited so that the said Virginia Commission may be given full and complete control of all the said certificates in their proposed negotiations with the State of West Virginia, and also in any action and proceeding which may be taken or instituted by the said Virginia Commission by and with the advice and approval of the said Attorney General under the said Act of the General Assembly of Virginia March 6, 1900:

Now therefore this agreement witnesseth: that the aforesaid Depositing Committee does hereby authorize and direct their said Depository Messrs. Brown Brothers & Company to issue to the Virginia Debt Commission a certificate that all the aforesaid Virginia Deferred Certificates which have up to this time been deposited with the said Brown Brothers and Company under the said depositing agreement of July 28, 1898, and all which may hereafter and before the 18th. day of September, 1905, be so deposited with the said depository are held by the said depository on deposit for and subject in all respects to the control and disposition of the said Virginia Commission in pursuance on the said joint resolution and Act of the General Assembly of Virginia; and to this end the said Messrs. Brown Brothers & Company are authorized and instructed to issue such cer-128 tificate to the said Virginia Commission in such form as to show that all of the certificates aforesaid have been received and are held by them on deposit for the said Virginia Commission and subject to the control and disposal of the said Commission:

But this agreement shall continue in force only until the said 18. day of September 1905, when the said certificate issued by the said Brown Brothers and Company to the said Virginia Commission for the purpose of making a settlement with West Virginia as aforesaid shall be returned to the said Depositing Committee, unless a settlement shall have been before that time negotiated with West Virginia is pursuance of said contract of September 18th. 1902, or unless negotiations be then pending with the properly constituted authorities of West Virginia for such settlement upon some equitable basis which has been agreed to by said Commission and the authorities of West Virginia aforesaid. Provided, however, that it is fully understood and agreed that the time for continuing in force this agreement may be extended by the consent and agreement of the parties hereto indorsed hereon or at the foot hereof, for such length of time and upon such conditions as the parties may hereafter specify; and this agreement may be changed, modified and amended with respect to the action and proceedings to be taken or instituted by the said Commission in the premises, as may hereafter be agreed upon by the parties and the indorsed as aforesaid, or as may be specified in a further and supplemental agreement between the parties.

In testimony whereof the signatures of the Chairman of the said Depositing Committee and of the Virginia Commission, attested by the respective Secretaries thereof, are hereunto affixed on the day and year first above written.

JOHN CROSBY BROWN, Chairman.

JOHN B. MOON,
Chairman of Virginia Commission.

JOSEPH BUTTON, Secretary.

129 The foregoing agreement is hereby approved as having been entered into by my advice and approval.

Dated December 14, 1904.

WILLIAM A. ANDERSON,
Attorney General of Virginia.

130 The foregoing agreement of December 14th, 1904, together with the contract of September 18th, 1902, therein referred to, are hereby extended in all their provisions until December 1st 1905, and they shall remain in full force until that date just as if December 1st 1905 instead of Sept. 18th, 1905, had been the date originally named therein for their limitation, with the right of extension, enlargement and modification on or before Dec. 1st, 1905, in all respects as therein specified.

Given under our hands this 9th day of September, 1905.

JOHN CROSBY BROWN,
Chairman Depositing Committee.

ROBT. L. HARRISON, Secretary.

JOHN B. MOON,
Chairman Virginia Commission.

JOS. BUTTON, Secretary.

The above extension of the contracts above referred to is hereby approved, this 9th day of September, 1905.

WILLIAM A. ANDERSON,
Attorney General of Virginia.

131 Upon the execution of the foregoing contract of December 14, 1904, hereto annexed, Messrs. Brown Bros. & Co., Bankers of New York, N. Y., the depository referred to in said contract, issued to the Virginia Commission therein named the certificate provided for in said contract, which was also in the form of a receipt and showed that Virginia deferred certificates of 1871 to the amount of $10,639,776.42 and certificates of other dates to the amount of $2,270,779.47 were held by said Brown Bros. & Co. on deposit for and subject to the control and disposal of said Commission; thus placing subject to the complete control and disposal of the Commission considerably more than two-thirds of the total of $12,703,451.79 of the certificates of 1871 outstanding and in the hands of the public, and a large majority of the total of $2,778,239.80 of the other certificates so outstanding.

Thereafter, in January and February, 1905, the Virginia Commission, through its properly constituted sub-committee acting with the Attorney General of Virginia, made to the Governor and Attorney General of West Virginia, and to the Finance Committees of the Legislature of that State, which was then in session, a full statement and presentation of the matters outstanding and unsettled between the two States in connection with the deferred certificates aforesaid, accompanied by an urgent plea on behalf of the State of Virginia that the Legislature of West Virginia would, at least, appoint a Committee or other public functionery with authority to take up the questions involved for the purposes of discussion and negotiation, but the Commission was again met, as it had been in a previous attempt to open negotiations on the subject, by an absolute refusal on the part of the authorities of West Virginia to treat on the subject at all; thus leaving to the Virginia Commission and Attorney 132 General of that State no possible means of bringing about the settlement, which they are charged with the responsibility of making, except by a resort to the Court having jurisdiction of controversies between States.

Now, therefore, it is hereby stipulated and agreed by and between the Depositing Committee, named as the party of the first part in the said foregoing contract of December 14th, 1904, and the Virginia Commission therein named as the party of the second part, the said Commission acting in this behalf by and with the advice and approval of the Attorney General of Virginia, that in accordance with the provisions contained in the said foregoing contract and addendum thereto of September 9th, 1905, the same is hereby amended, modified and extended as follows, to wit:

1st. Neither the said foregoing contract of December 14th, 1904, nor the contract therein referred to between the same parties, bearing date September 18th, 1902, shall expire on the 1st. day of December, 1905, but the same shall continue in force in all respects just as if no time limit had been named in either of said contracts, and this agreement shall be taken as a continuation, modification and extension of said contracts.

2nd. The certificate or certificates heretofore given by Brown Bros. & Co., the depository of the said Committee, to the said Virginia Commission, covering the deferred certificates aforesaid, shall be retained by the said Commission and shall remain in full force and effect without regard to time limit; and the said Brown Bros. & Co. shall issue and give to the said Commission such other and further certificates and receipts in the premises, by way of amendment or in lieu of those already given or otherwise, as may be deemed needful or desirable in order to place said deferred certificates more completely and finally under the control and at the disposal of 133 the said Commission for the purpose of carrying out this agreement; and especially shall they give such certificates or receipts to cover all such Virginia deferred certificates as have been or may be deposited with them and not covered by certificates or receipts previously given to the Commission; and the said Virginia Commission are hereby given and invested with the full and complete control and right to dispose of all deferred certificates now or hereafter covered by or embraced in the receipts and certificates of Brown Bros. & Co., as aforesaid.

3rd. The said Virginia Commission hereby stipulate and agree, by and with the advice and approval of the Attorney General of Virginia, that, in their judgment, it is needful and proper, in order to protect the interest of the State and bring about and carry into effect a settlement in the premises, that a suit should be instituted in the name of the State of Virginia against the State of West Virginia in the Supreme Court of the United States asking for an adjudication and settlement by that Court of the matters aforesaid unsettled and undetermined between the two States, arising or growing out of the debt of the original State of Virginia before its dismemberment and on account of which said deferred certificates were issued, the same to be brought and instituted as provided in the Act of the General Assembly of Virginia, of March 6th, 1900, referred to in said contract of December 14th, 1904; and the said Virginia Commission, acting by and with the advice and approval of the Attorney General of that State, do hereby undertake and agree that such a suit shall be brought against the State of West Virginia for the purpose of obtaining a settlement as aforesaid, as soon as the pleadings, papers and documents relating thereto can be conveniently and properly drawn up and prepared for presentation to the said Court, which said suit shall be instituted, conducted and proceeded with in all respects in accordance with the provisions of the said Act of the General Assembly of Virginia and the Joint Resolution of the said General Assembly of March 6th, 1894, also referred to in said contract of December 14th, 1904; but the power to make and carry into effect a settlement and adjustment in the premises by agreement with West Virginia as to the deferred certificates placed subject to the control of the Commission as aforesaid, as provided in the previous contracts aforesaid, shall remain vested in the said Commission, notwithstanding the institution and pendency of such suit.

4th. And the Virginia Commission do further undertake and agree that, in accordance with the terms and conditions of the said Joint Resolution and Act of the General Assembly of Virginia, they will account for, pay over and deliver such amount, either in cash or securities, as may be realized from West Virginia through any settlement made by the said Commission with that State, either by means of an adjudication or recovery in said suit or otherwise, for or on account of the deferred certificates now or hereafter deposited and placed subject to their control as aforesaid, to the said Depositing Committee in full settlement and satisfaction of all claims under said certificates; and the said Depositing Committee agrees on behalf of the depositors of said deferred certificates so placed subject to the control of the said Commission and on behalf of those entitled to the benefit of said certificates as assignees of said depositors or otherwise to accept as aforesaid such amount, either in cash or securities, as may be determined or ascertained in any such suit to be due by, or as may be realized through any adjustment or settlement as aforesaid from the State of West Virginia on account of the said certificates and on account of the bonds represented by and mentioned in the said certificates respectively, in full settlement and satisfaction of all claims on account of said certificates and on account of the bonds therein mentioned, and to accept and take such adjudication against the State of West Virginia in full discharge and acquittance of all claims in the premises against the State of Virginia.

135

5th. It is further understood and agreed that if from any cause the said Commission shall fail or be unable to bring about such adjustment or settlement or to obtain a determination or ascertainment of the liability of West Virginia as hereinbefore provided for, then it shall be the duty of the said Commission to restore to the control of the said Depositing Committee all such deferred certificates as may have been placed subject to the control and disposal of said Commission as aforesaid.

VIRGINIA

WEST VIRGINIA.

REPORT OF COMMISSION—JOHN MARSHALL, CHAIRMAN. FILED AS AN EXHIBIT FOR THE COMPLAINANT.

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1907.

Original, No. 4.

vs.

WEST VIRGINIA.

REPORT OF COMMISSION—JOHN MARSHALL, CHAIRMAN. FILED AS AN EXHIBIT FOR THE COMPLAINANT.

The fact that Virginia in 1811-12 called upon Chief Justice Marshall and others of her leading citizens to devote some weeks or months of their time to a reconnaissance of the region lying between the Blue Ridge Mountains and the Ohio, for the purpose of learning the most desirable line of communication between the waters of the Eastern Seaboard and the Western waters, and that the Great Chief Justice and the eminent men who served with him on that Commission responded to that call and devoted themselves to the arduous service which its acceptance involved, is evidence of the profound interest which in the early part of the last century the people of Virginia and her leading citizens took in that subject, and the importance which they attached to it.

The report of this historic Commission is therefore reprinted and filed as an exhibit for the complainant in this cause.

Col. Claudius Crozet, an eminent civil engineer, who, after having served as an engineer under Napoleon, and afterwards as Professor of Mathematics or Engineering in the U. S. Military Academy at West Point, was for a number of years State Engineer of Virginia, and some of the most important of her works of internal improvement were begun under his direction.

In one of his reports he refers to the service rendered by this Commission in the following language:

"The first notice of the connection of the eastern and western waters is found in a report, made at the close of 1812, by the commissioners appointed by an act of the preceding session, 'for the purpose of viewing certain rivers within this Commonwealth.' The commissioners, John Marshall, James Breckenridge, William Lewis, James M'Dowell, William Caruthers, Andrew Alexander, examined the James river, from Lynchburg up, crossed the mountains, and descended with much difficulty, and indeed personal danger, the hitherto unexplored New river. They went through this arduous task with a zeal and perseverance worthy of such men.

"A plain sluice improvement of the James and Jackson's river, up to Dunlap's creek; thence a turnpike road, across the Alleghany mountain, which has been made since, and finally a sluice navigation of the Greenbriar, New, and Kanawha rivers were, at that early day, all they thought proper to recommend.

"A remarkable, and in our day, curious passage, occurs in their report. 'Your commissioners submit with diffidence the following propositions: First, that boats impelled by steam may be employed successfully on New River * * *. But they beg leave to say, that the currents of the Hudson, of the Mohawk, and of the Mississippi, are very strong; and that a practice so entirely novel as the use of steam in navigation, will probably receive great improvement, and the power itself be so diversified as to be applied in new and different situations, &c.' These remarks, at the very dawn of steam navigation, show, on their part, much sagacity and forethought."

See Report of Colonel Claudius Crozet, late State Engineer, to the General Assembly of Virginia, 1848.

WILLIAM A. ANDERSON,

March, 1908.

Besides the Great Chief Justice, the gentlemen who served upon this Commission were James Breckenridge, distinguished as a soldier, and statesman, and esteemed by contemporaries as the equal in ability, though not in oratory, of his brother, John Breckenridge, of Kentucky; William Lewis, a patriotic citizen, of the highest character, a near relative of Col. Charles, and General Andrew Lewis, of Point Pleasant fame, and a worthy scion of such illustrious lineage; James M'Dowell, one of the gifted men of his generation, who afterwards rendered eminent service as a member of Congress, and as Governor of the Commonwealth; William Caruthers, a leading citizen of the Valley of Virginia, and a farmer and business man of very high character and standing; and Andrew Alexander, surveyor, engineer, representative citizen, a man of skill in his profession, and remarkable for his public spirit.

For re-printing the Report of the Commissioners on the Navigation of the Great Kanhawa, &c.

[AGREED TO BY BOTH HOUSES OF ASSEMBLY, FEBRUARY 14, 1814.]

WHEREAS, it would greatly promote the welfare of this Commonwealth, and the prosperity of our sister States, to form a more intimate connexion between the Eastern and Western Waters of the United States; and, with a view to that object, the General Assembly of Virginia, at a former session, appointed Commissioners to survey the head waters of James-River and the Great Kanhawa, with instructions to ascertain the practicability of extending their navigation to the base of the chain of mountains which divides them, and at the shortest and easiest portage across it; a trust which was accepted and fulfilled, by the Commissioners who acted therein, in a manner that entitles them to the thanks of their country: And, as the result of their labors has never been presented to the Legislature of the Union, nor to the governments of the several States, who cannot but feel an interest in the accomplishment of an enterprise so important to the arts, manufactures, and commerce of the United States—

Resolved, therefore, That the executive of this commonwealth be, and they are hereby empowered and requested, to cause the Report of the Commissioners to be re-printed, and the Map and References accompanying it to be reduced to a convenient scale, engraved, printed, and annexed to the Report; and, reserving two hundred and fifty copies thereof for the use of the General Assembly, to forward a copy to each of the Commissioners whose names are subscribed to the Report, to each Member of the Congress of the United States, and to the Executives of the several States and Territories.

The said Letter and Report were read as follows:

Richmond, December 26, 1812.

SIR—I hasten to submit to your Excellency, for the purpose of being laid before the General Assembly, the Report of the Commissioners who executed the act of the last session, entitled "An act appointing Commissioners for the purpose of viewing certain Rivers within this Commonwealth."

To their distance from each other, and the consequent difficulties attending the interchange of sentiment, and the attainment of their respective signatures, is to be ascribed the delay which has taken place in the performance of this part of their duty.

The more detailed report, to which the enclosed refers, is not yet received, but it is expected in a few days, and will then be transmitted to your Excellency. It was not thought advisable longer to withhold the general report, for the purpose of accompanying it with that more in detail, to which it refers.

I have the honor to be,
Sir, with great respect,
Your obedient servant,

J. MARSHALL.

His Excellency Governor BARBOUR.

INLAND NAVIGATION.

REPORT.

To the Honorable the Speaker and Members of the General Assembly, the undersigned Commissioners, named, with others, in the act entitled "An act appointing Commissioners for the purpose of viewing certain Rivers within this Commonwealth,"

RESPECTFULLY REPORT—

That, supposing the autumn to be the season which afforded the fairest prospects for giving effect to the views of the Legislature, as expressed in their act, your Commissioners agreed that a meeting should be called on the first of September, at Lynchburg. The number required by law, for the execution of the service they were directed to perform, having assembled, and the necessary preparations having been made, your Commissioners began at the Bridge at Lynchburg, to view James-river, and to take its level by sections to the mouth of Dunlop's-creek. Mr. Andrew Alexander, the surveyor of Rockbridge county, had been engaged to execute this duty under their direction. To his report, which your Commissioners believe to be accurate, they beg leave to refer, as exhibiting, in minute detail, the information required by the law.

As an actual measurement of the whole river would have employed so much time as to defer the completion of the work, until high waters might defeat the object of the Legislature, and was rendered the less necessary by previous surveys; distances were in general conjectured. The eye, aided by a time-piece, and occasionally corrected by actual measurement, furnished information, which, though not perfectly exact, was believed not to vary much from the truth, and to be substantially sufficient. Those places which present serious obstacles were measured by the chain, and the elevation was taken throughout by a spirit level.

On that part of the river which is comprised within the charter already granted, your Commissioners presume that little, if any, information is expected from them, other than will be found in the annexed report of Mr. Alexander.

From Beall's Bridge, or Crow's Ferry, to the mouth of the Cow-Pasture, no difficulty presents itself, which may not be with certainty surmounted. The falls are no where formidable; there are long stretches of smooth water, and the shallows may be so deepened as to afford water for boats bringing down from six to eight tons, and carrying up from four to six tons, if not throughout the year, through all but a very inconsiderable portion of it. Your Commissioners give the opinion, unanimously, and with great confidence, that the navigation from Crow's Ferry to the mouth of the Cow-Pasture, may, with improvements by no means expensive, be rendered as certain, as useful, and as permanent, as the navigation from the same place to Lynchburg; and that it may be used at all times when the navigation to Lynchburg can be used, with boats carrying an equal burthen—indeed, that it may be rendered more safe and less laborious, than that from the mouth of the North Fork to Lynchburg now is.

From the mouth of the Cow-Pasture to the mouth of Dunlop's-creek, the difficulties become more considerable, and their removal will require greater expenditures of money. The mass of water diminishes, and the elevation increases.—The shoals become longer and shallower, and the intervals of smooth water shorter. Yet, this rugged navigation, though totally unimproved, is now used during high water. Boats, laden with the produce of the country, pass every year from the mouth of Dunlop's-creek to Richmond. It is, therefore, proved to be, even at this time, practicable for some portion of the year. This portion varies with the seasons. Most commonly, it commences in November, and terminates late in May, or early in June.

That, by the removal of rocks, now lying promiscuously and irregularly through the bed of the river, which it will be necessary in only a few instances to blow, and by the judicious application of labor, to the collection of water in narrower spaces than it now covers, this navigation may be rendered much more secure and beneficial, and the time during which it can be used may be considerably extended, will not admit of doubt.—Whether this portion of the river may be rendered at all times boatable, depends on the depth of water to be collected in particular channels by such means as are applicable to the object.

Some of your Commissioners have been personally engaged in opening the navigation of the North Fork of James-river, through Rockbridge. They are decidedly of opinion, that the river denominated "Jackson's," contains as far as Dunlops-creek, more water and less formidable obstructions than were found in the North Fork. Yet the North Fork, though its improvement is far from being complete, is now actually used to great advantage, and is not much inferior to the river below.—Some experienced and judicious boatmen, who were employed on the expedition, who are well acquainted with the river and its navigation, unite in the declaration, that, if the means be taken which ought to be employed, that part of James-river which is between the Cow-Pasture and Dunlop's-creek, may be used by any boats which will be capable of continuing their voyage to Lynchburg.

Your Commissioners concur in this opinion; and they take occasion now to remark, that should it be deemed advisable still to adhere to the system of improvement heretofore used in the upper part of the river, the difficulties of this navigation would, they think, be much diminished by several facilities which might be given to it. They would particularly suggest chains, with buoys fastened in rocks or otherwise, or walls on which men may walk, of which boatmen might avail themselves to lessen the labor of ascending places of peculiar difficulty; and thus either to increase the load which may be carried up the river, or to diminish the number of persons necessary for carrying up a given load. They will also mention a fact deemed favorable to the object contemplated by the Legislature. It is this: although the cold may be more intense in the bosom of the mountains than below, this part of the river freezes over.

It will perhaps save the honorable the members of the Legislature some calculation, to observe, that the distance from Lynchburg to the commencement of the Blue Ridge is stated, in the report of Mr. Alexander, to be twenty-five miles one-fourth and thirty poles; the elevation to be one hundred and eleven feet eight inches; shewing an average elevation of four and an half feet to the mile.—The distance through the mountain, that is from Racoon Island to the mouth of the North Fork, is eight miles one-fourth and forty-nine poles, and the elevation one hundred and one feet six inches, giving an average elevation of upwards of twelve feet to the mile. The distance from the mouth of the North Fork to Crow's Ferry, or Beall's Bridge, the highest point to which navigation is to be carried by the James-River Company, is stated at twenty-six miles and thirty-eight poles, and the elevation is one hundred and thirty-one feet four inches: making the average elevation five feet to a mile.

The distance from Beall's Bridge, or Crow's Ferry, to the mouth of the Cow-Pasture, is stated at thirty-six miles fifty-nine poles, and the elevation is one hundred and ninety feet three inches, making the average elevation five and an half feet nearly to a mile. The distance from the mouth of the Cow-Pasture to the mouth of Dunlop's-creek, is stated at twenty-three miles three-fourths and twenty poles, and the elevation is two hundred and twenty-eight feet three inches, making the average elevation nine and an half feet to the mile.

Having reached Dunlop's-creek, your Commissioners proceeded to view and mark out what appeared to them to be the best and most direct way for a turnpike road from the mouth of that creek to the most convenient navigable point on Greenbrier river.

With some inconsiderable deviations, which will appear in the report of Mr. Alexander, already referred to, and some others which will be suggested, the road now leading from the mouth of Dunlop's-creek, by Bowyer's Sulphur Spring, to Anderson's Ford, over Greenbrier, at the mouth of Howard's-creek, is believed to be the most eligible which can be made. To that part of the road which passes from the mouth of Dunlop's-creek to the old Iron Works, a distance of about five miles, there are considerable objections, which your Commissioners are inclined to believe may be diminished. The road crosses the creek eight times, and the ground, during the winter and spring would, if much used and not well covered with stone or gravel, be much cut and be very deep. The creek too is frequently so high as not to be fordable.

Should it be found practicable, which your Commissioners believe to be the fact, to render Dunlop's-creek navigable up to its falls, some distance below the old Iron Works, these inconveniences would be in a great measure removed.

Should it be deemed unadvisable to carry navigation up Dunlop's-creek, a direction, as is understood from some of the inhabitants of that neighborhood, may be given to the road, so as to avoid five crossings of the creek, and at the same time shorten the distance. No attempt to view this way was made, because guides could not readily be procured, and your Commissioners feared that, by devoting too much time to a minor object, on which complete information is attainable with ease and certainty through various channels, they might hazard the failure of others which were believed to be of much importance.

The road from the Sulphur Spring to Greenbrier crosses Howard's-creek, which is often not fordable, six times, and is in a few places attended with some difficulty. A small improvement may be made in it, and the steepest part avoided, by returning it, near the river, to the ground over which it formerly passed, and from which it has been lately taken.

The road over the mountain has been attentively viewed, and the deviations recommended, from that now in use, carefully and plainly marked. Your Commissioners feel much satisfaction in stating, that the elevation of this part of the road may, in the most unfavorable places, be reduced to an angle of five degrees with the horison. By occasionally removing the earth, for small distances, this angle may be still further diminished. It is believed to be susceptible of improvement on as easy terms as any other road, since the materials for a turnpike are every where convenient, and not more levelling will be necessary than must be expected in passing through a mountainous country.

Your commissioners proceeded down the Greenbrier river in the boat in which they ascended the James. The season had been remarkably dry, and the water was declared by the inhabitants to be as low as at any period within their recollection. It frequently spreads over a wide bed covered with large stone, and is, in its present unimproved state, and at the season when it was viewed, so very shallow for the greater part of its course, as not to swim an empty boat. The labor of removing stone, and of dragging the boat over those which could not be removed without implements provided for the purpose, was so great, that your Commissioners at one time were enabled to advance only three miles in two days, even with the assistance of a horse and of many additional laborers. In part of the river the shoals are frequent and long, and the falls, as the report of Mr. Alexander will shew, considerable. At the great falls, which is the most important of them, the descent is twelve feet in forty-eight poles. There is no perpendicular fall at this place, but one continued rapid, with large rocks, irregularly interspersed through the bed of the river. Near the mouth of the river there is a flat rock, which continues for about two hundred and forty poles, with many irregular apertures or fissures through which the water passes. Although, in the usual state of the river, this rock is covered with water of sufficient depth for navigation; yet, such was the drought of the last autumn, it was necessary to drag the boat over its whole extent.

These difficulties present obstacles to navigation during a season when the waters are remarkably low, which can be surmounted only at a considerable expense.

But, from the best information your Commissioners can obtain, and they believe it to be correct, the Greenbrier is seldom so low at any season as it was during the last autumn: and it seldom if ever fails, for eight or nine months in the year, to be at least two feet higher than when viewed by your Commissioners; a depth of water unquestionably sufficient for the purpose of navigation. The testimony given by the inhabitants to this fact, was corroborated by appearances on the river. The indications of a recent considerable diminution of water were not to be mistaken.

On an attentive consideration of the obstacles which were found by your Commissioners to be great, while the river remains in the state in which they viewed it, they are unanimously and decidely of opinion, that its navigation may be rendered as safe, as certain, and as easy as that of the James, at all times, except when the water is unusually low. The rocks are in general loose, and may be removed without extraordinary difficulty, so as to afford a tolerably smooth passage to boats; and, by collecting the water into narrow channels, a sufficient depth may be obtained, with the exception of a short period in a very dry year, to swim any boat which can be brought at the same time down James-river. But so scanty is the supply of water in a time of uncommon drought, that doubts are entertained whether there may not be a short season of the year during which, unless a considerable expense be incurred, the navigation must be suspended. Though aided by men and horses, ten days of unremitting labor were consumed in passing from the mouth of Howard's-creek to the mouth of Greenbrier river, a distance not much exceeding forty-eight miles. In the month of June, the same voyage, if not retarded by measuring the river, might have been performed in a single day. Some of your Commissioners, however, are of opinion, that the Greenbrier may, without great additional expense, be rendered at all times passable for boats carrying half a load.

In addition to the shallowness of the water, (an inconvenience which is common to all rivers as you approach their sources, and which disappears for eight or nine months in the year) and to the rocks which have been mentioned, the obstructions to the navigation of the Greenbrier consists in its falls, and in the general rapidity of its current.

The great falls alone are of sufficient magnitude to merit particular attention. These unquestionably admit of being rendered navigable, either by opening a sluice judiciously through them, or by locks. The latter would be most expensive, but would leave the navigation less laborious.

The rapidity of the current may be estimated by observing that the descent in forty-eight miles and eighty-four poles, is three hundred and sixty-two feet ten inches, between seven and eight feet to the mile.

This current will present no difficulty to a boat descending the river. To one ascending it, the labor will be considerable, but not so considerable as in some parts of James-river.

The night of the 28th of September, was passed among the islands in the mouth of Greenbrier; and on the morning of the 29th, your Commissioners entered New-river.

The New-river, or that part of the Great Kanhawa which is above the mouth of Gauley, having to search its intricate way, and force a passage through a long chain of lofty and rugged mountains, whose feet it washes, exhibits an almost continued succession of shoals and falls, from which the navigator is sometimes, though rarely, relieved by a fine sheet of deep placid water.

The difficulties encountered in descending this river were of a character essentially different from those which were experienced in the Greenbrier. Uncommon as had been the drought, the supply of water was abundant. The boat sometimes, though rarely, rubbed upon a shoal; but in every such case it was apparent that a sufficient passage might be opened without much labor or expense. The velocity of the current and the enormous rocks which often interrupt it, the number and magnitude of the rapids and falls, the steepness, cragginess and abruptness of the banks, constitute the great impediments which at present exist to navigation between the mouth of the Greenbrier and the Great Falls of Kanhawa.

The distance from the mouth of Greenbrier to Bowyer's Ferry, is forty miles one quarter and forty-six poles, and the descent is four hundred and sixty-six feet seven inches; that is, eleven feet six inches in each mile. In general, there is much sameness in the appearance of this part of the river. Long rapids, frequently terminated by a fall of from five to ten feet, in a distance of ten, twenty, thirty, and sometimes a greater number of poles; an intervening space, sometimes more, sometimes less considerable, of swift or smooth water; rocks, sometimes above the surface, sometimes near it, so as to require great caution to save a boat from dashing on them; a copious stream, with a current commonly impetuous, constitute its leading characteristics.

Falls too great to come within this general description, will be particularly noticed.

Brook's Falls are about four miles and one-fourth below the mouth of Greenbrier. The water descends thirteen feet seven inches in fifty poles. In its most rapid part the descent is five feet ten inches in fourteen poles. The boat was navigated through this place.

A much more formidable obstruction is the falls at Richmond's Mill. These are designated in the neighborhood by the name of the "Great Falls of New-river," but are generally called at a distance, "Lick-Creek Falls."

At this place the water may with propriety be said to fall perpendicularly twenty-three feet. For this distance, the sheet which dashes over the summit is intercepted only by huge fragments of broken rock, which, having been successively disjointed from the brink of the precipice, have fallen into the foaming basin below, where, piled on each other, they form one or two benches that break the cataract. A small distance lower down is another fall of three or four feet.

Here, for the first time, the boat was taken out of the water and let down by skids.

The ground along which a canal may be carried around these falls, pursuing the course of Richmond's mill-race, was measured, and the elevation taken. The descent was found to be twenty-two feet nine inches, in one hundred and eighty-one poles.

This estimate excludes a part of the falls, between five and six feet of which are just above the head of Richmond's mill-race.

The bottom of the river for some distance above these falls, is a hard rock, often appearing above the surface, and much covered with moveable stones, some of which are very large. The bottom of the mill-race appears to be of the same description.

From Bowyer's Ferry to the Falls of the Great Kanhawa, was estimated at nineteen miles and fifty-eight poles, in which distance the river falls three hundred and thirty-one feet; that is, seventeen feet to a mile. The honorable the legislature will perceive, that below the ferry the descent, in the same distance, is greater than above. For a part of this space, the scene is awful and discouraging. The vast volume of water which rolls down New-river, and which, far above the ferry, often spreads, without becoming shallow, over a bed three or four hundred yards wide; is seldom more than one hundred or one hundred and fifty yards wide. In some places, for a mile or more in continuation, it is compressed by the mountains on each side, into a channel of from twenty to sixty yards wide; and even these narrow limits are still more narrowed by enormous rocks which lie promiscuously in the bed of the river, through which it is often difficult to find a passage wide enough for the admission of a boat. In some places the bank is formed of rugged and perpendicular cliffs of entire rock, which appear to be twenty, thirty, and forty feet high; in others, enormous, but unconnected, rocks dip into the water.

There are unequivocal indications of the river's having risen, in these narrows, from thirty to forty feet perpendicularly.

Immediately above the mouth of Gauley, the river opens and presents a beautiful sheet of deep smooth water, which is succeeded by the rocks over which it dashes, and forms the Great Falls of Kanhawa. The height of these falls is twenty feet four inches. With its name, the river looses its wild and savage aspect. It is no longer confined by rugged cliff, by mountains barely separated from each other, nor interrupted by enormous masses of rocks which are scarcely to be avoided.

Within a short distance above the falls, the current is not unmanageably swift, nor the rocks over which it passes uneven. Below, quite to the rocks which have fallen from the brink over which the cataract rushes, is a deep smooth and beautiful basin. The river is so wide as to rise, in the greatest freshes, only six or seven feet. The falls themselves constitute the impediment, and the only impediment at this place.

Your Commissioners have deemed it proper to state in their full strength, the difficulties which are to be surmounted in opening the intercourse between this part of the state of Virginia and the western country; and to put the legislature, as far as is possible, in possession of the testimony on which their opinion is formed, as well as of their opinion. If, misguided by their conviction of the importance of the object, they are too sanguine in their hopes of its accomplishment, the facts now communicated will enable the General Assembly to correct the mistaken conclusions which have been drawn, and to determine on the course which will best promote the interets of the public.

The practicability of rendering the Greenbrier navigable has already been stated. The system which may be found best adapted for the improvement of James-river, will be equally applicable to the Greenbrier, and will be equally successful.—The one river and the other will be rendered more or less valuable as more or less labor and skill may be employed on them; but there can be no mistake in saying that, without incurring an expense which any would pronounce extravagant they are both capable of being brought into extensive use. Not only in descending, but in ascending also, these rivers may be navigated to great advantage.

With respect to New-river, a judgment cannot be formed quite so decisively, nor pronounced quite so confidently. The difficulties are great, and deserve to be seriously considered.

The boat which conveyed your Commissioners, passed from the mouth of Greenbrier, to the place where their expedition terminated, without being taken out of the water, except at the Great Falls of New-river, and at the Great Falls of the Kanhawa. It was navigated in the usual way through all the other difficult places which abound in New-river, except two—both below Bowyer's Ferry. Through these it was conducted by ropes.

The boat was not laden, nor was it empty. In addition to the number of hands usually employed in navigation, it carried between two and three thousand weight. The greater part of this burthen was taken out in the most difficult places; but in many of considerable magnitude, it remained in the boat. Where the vessel was guided by ropes, the necessity of resorting to this expedient was occasioned solely by the intervention of rocks, which can be removed.

It is also worthy of notice, that this voyage was performed by boatmen, who, having never before seen the river, were reduced to the necessity of selecting their way at the moment, without the aid of previous information.

The only impediments to the descent of the boat, except at the two great falls already mentioned, were rocks lying so near the surface of the water as to strike the bottom while shooting over them. At the usual height of the river, these rocks would be entirely covered, and all danger from them be removed; but others would be placed in a situation to expose a boat to equal hazard. It is therefore necessary, even for the descending navigation, to open a plain and broad sluice through all the rapids and falls, so as to relieve boats navigating the river from all danger of being dashed against the rocks. This may be effected by removing some and blowing others.—This sluice may be so conducted as to graduate the falls where they are most sudden, and thereby, in some degree, to diminish the impetuosity of the current.

Brook's Falls, the Great Falls of New-river, and the Great Falls of Kanhawa, will probably require and admit of a different course.

The first of these, which is the least formidable of the three, will present three alternatives to the election of those who may be engaged in improving the navigation.

First—One or more locks, which may unquestionably be constructed at this place.

Second—A canal, which is already almost formed, on the north side of the river. Its completion would require that it be opened for a short distance, both where it would receive the water at the head of the falls and where it would empty itself below them.

To the eligibility of this canal, there can be but one objection. There may be impracticable rock, now hidden by the earth, so near the surface as to render this plan unadvisable.

Third—To open a sluice in the river, along its northern bank, and graduate the fall as far as may be compatible with that system of operation.

The Great Falls of New-river must be turned, by using a canal to be cut on the southern side, pursing nearly the tract of Richmond's mill-race. Should locks be employed, it will most probably be found advisable to place them in this canal. Should locks be dispensed with, there will be no difficulty in descending through this channel; but the toil of ascending, must, at this place, be considerable.

At the Great Falls of Kanhawa, there is, near Morris's mill, a very eligible place for locks. If a canal be preferred, there is every reason to believe that the ground will admit of one, which may be so extended, and the fall thereby so graduated, as to afford a safe passage to loaded boats.

These observations are formed on the state of the river when viewed by your Commissioners.—It will readily occur, that they cannot judge with certainty of the changes which may be brought about by a great rise of water.

It would seem most probable, that by such rise the falls would be diminished, because the water at their feet would pass off less rapidly than at their head. But the apprehension cannot be entirely discarded, that in the narrows, which have been mentioned, the torrent would, in a flood, be too impetuous to be trusted. It is probable, that a moderate elevation of the water would rather facilitate the passage of the boats; at least of those descending the river; but that great floods would suspend the navigation.

Having stated their view of this subject, your Commissioners will only add their opinion, that the New-river may be relied on with certainty, for the transportation of articles from east to west.

On the practicability of using this channel of conveyance for the transportation of articles from the western country, towards the rivers which empty into the Atlantic, at least so much of it as lies between Bowyer's Ferry and the Great Falls of Kanhawa, they must speak with less confidence. The great difficulty consists in the velocity of the current. For several miles, between Bowyer's Ferry and the Falls, it is believed that a canal would be impracticable. The river is susceptible of no other improvement than may be made in its channel, or on its banks. The current is often too rapid to be stemmed by a boat impelled by oars; and the water too deep to admit the use of poles. If a channel, sufficient for the safe passage of vessels, be opened, still some other means than oars or poles must be devised for impelling them up the stream.

Your Commissioners submit with diffidence the following proposition:

First—That boats impelled by steam may be employed successfully on New-river.

With the capacities of this powerful agent they are too little acquainted to speak with confidence of the use which may be made of it in the waters of Virginia. Elsewhere, it has certainly been applied with great advantage to the purposes of navigation. Neither have they that intimate knowledge of the velocity of the currents, against which vessels have been propelled by it, to compare them with that of New-river, and to hazard any decided opinion on the comparison.—But they beg leave to say, that the currents of the Hudson, of the Mohawk, and of the Mississippi, are very strong; and that a practice so entirely novel as the use of steam in navigation, will probably receive great improvement, and the power itself be so diversified in its modifications, as to be applied in new and different situations, as their exigencies may require. It is believed, that a sufficient depth of water is certainly obtainable, but whether sufficient employment may be found, to justify the use of a vessel which must, in any state of things, be constructed at considerable expense, is a question your Commissioners cannot attempt to solve.

Second—Should it be found impracticable to apply steam with advantage to the navigation of New-river, it is respectfully suggested, that between the Great Falls of Kanhawa and Bowyer's Ferry, resort may be had to horse labor.

To give this facility to the navigation, it will be necessary to construct a horse-way along the bank of the river at different heights, or at the most common height of the water. The objection that such way cannot be used at all times, will lose much of its force, when it shall be recollected that the navigation up the river will admit of being suspended for considerable intervals, with less injury to those who use it, than that which conveys to the western country articles imported for general consumption. The construction of this way, however, will require the blowing of a great quantity of rock, and will, consequently, be expensive.

Third—Should neither of these expedients be deemed eligible, it is respectfully suggested, that boats may be forced up the current, where it is too rapid for oars and too deep for poles, by the aid of chains fastened in the rocks on the bank.

Whatever doubts may be entertained respecting the navigation for boats ascending the river between the Great Falls of Kanhawa and Bowyer's Ferry; your Commissioners are entirely persuaded of the practicability of using it advantageously between the ferry and the mouth of Greenbrier.

In obedience to the law under which they have acted, your Commissioners will now proceed to state their ideas of the sums of money which will probably be necessary to open the river and make the road they have viewed.

No part of their duty has been performed with less confidence than this.

It will readily occur to the legislature, that no estimate of expense of executing so great a work as that which is to afford to the western parts of Virginia the means of conveying the produce of their lands to market, and probably to connect Virginia commercially with her sister states in the west, can have just pretensions to exactness.—Were the system of improvement, and the extent to which that system is to be carried, accurately defined; any calculations which could now be made, even by professional men, of the sum necessary for its execution, might be found to vary widely from that which would be actually expended. Still less precision can be looked for in the calculations of your Commissioners.

But it must be apparent that the expense of improvement will essentially depend on the object for which the improvement shall be made.

If the views of the legislature shall be limited to the conveyance of articles, the growth of the upper country, down James-river, the cheapness of that conveyance will certainly depend much on the degree of perfection to which the improvement may be carried; but the river, being the only channel of conveyance, will, if merely practicable, be used to some extent.

If the views of the legislature shall extend to a free commercial intercourse with the western states, or any of them, the channel selected for that intercourse will come into competition with others which now exist or may be opened, and must recommend itself to a preference by the advantages it offers. With a view to the latter object, no improvement ought to be undertaken but with a determination to make it complete and effectual.

The estimates of expense were more particularly made by Mr. Caruthers, who has been personally engaged in opening the North Fork through Rock-bridge. This gentleman made his calculations on the plan which has been adopted by the James-River Company, with such improvements as would better adapt that plan to steam navigation. According to his estimate, one hundred and ninety thousand dollars will be sufficient to accomplish the work from Beall's Bridge, or Crow's Ferry, to the Falls of the Great Kanhawa, including the road.—This estimate is formed on a comparison of the impediments to be removed, with those he had himself encountered in opening the North Fork of James-river. Some others of your Commissioners, who have too little knowledge of the labor necessary for the accomplishment of objects of this description, to confide themselves, in their own judgment, much less to recommend it to the confidence of others, are so impressed with the magnitude of the difficulties they have seen, as to be unable to persuade themselves that the work can be completed for the sum at which it has been estimated. That estimate does not appear to them to be extravagant, if the descending navigation alone be contemplated. To make the ascending navigation such as will entitle it to extensive use, and give this a preference over other routes, they submit, though with much diffidence, the opinion that at least a half a million, perhaps six hundred thousand dollars, will be requisite.

From the mouth of Dunlop's-creek to the mouth of Howard's creek, is twenty-eight miles and forty-four poles. From the first mentioned place to the summit of Alleghany mountain, is sixteen miles and thirty-six poles, and the elevation is nine hundred and forty-eight feet, which makes an angle with the horison of less than three-quarters of a degree. From the summit of the mountain to the mouth of Howard's-creek, the distance is twelve miles and eight poles, and the descent is eight hundred and thirty-eight feet seven inches, making with the horison an angle of about three-quarters of a degree. There are no peculiarities attending this route, which will render any plan the legislature may prefer for turnpiking it, more costly in its application to this road, than to others which have been constructed in various parts of the United States. It is now at least equal to, perhaps better, than any other of equal distance in the same part of the country.

In presenting to the honorable the legislature the advantages which, in the opinion of your Commissioners, will probably accrue to this state from executing the work to which their report relates, it will be necessary to divide this subject, and to consider, separately—first, those which may reasonably be expected to result from executing it in part; next, those which are to be looked for from executing it in the whole.

Should the navigation of James-river be carried up to the mouth of Dunlop's-creek, and a turnpike road be made over the Alleghany mountain, although nothing further should be done, a considerable impulse will be given to the agriculture, and a valuable effect produced on the wealth and population of a considerable tract of country. It cannot reasonably be doubted, that Bath, a part of Botetourt, and a great part of Greenbrier, Monroe, and perhaps even Giles, would find a real interest in searching for a market on James-river, for the produce of their soil, if such safe and cheap conveyance were afforded them as might be given by the improvements which have been stated.—Agriculture would mingle more than heretofore with grazing; and industry would flourish when the reward of industry should be attainable. Those more western countries, whose distance might forbid the attempt to transport grain manufactured into flour, or distilled into spirits, to the markets on James-river, might still be encouraged to bring to those markets, salt, salted provisions, and various manufactures of hemp. An increase of population would result, not only from the check which this state of things would give to emigration, but also from its operation on the inhabitants, in other respects.

Other parts of the state would derive corresponding advantages from their intercourse with a section of the country which would have more to sell and more to purchase than at present. By the augmentation of the wealth and population of a part, not only would those belonging to that part be improved in their circumstances, but the whole would be more powerful, and the public burdens being more divided, might press less heavily on each individual.

These advantages would probably be extended by improving the navigation of the Greenbrier also.

Should New-river be rendered a safe and easy channel of communication, between the Ohio and the commercial towns on James-river, the subject will assume a more important aspect, and the advantages may be estimated on a larger scale. Not only will that part of our own state which lies on the Kanawa and on the Ohio, receive their supplies and send much of their produce to market through James-river, but an immense tract of fertile country, a great part of the states of Kentucky and Ohio, will most probably give their commerce the same direction. All that part of the state of Kentucky which lies above Louisville, and all that part of the state of Ohio whose trade would pass through the river of that name, might reasonably be expected to maintain a large portion of their commercial intercourse with the Atlantic states, through the James or the Potowmac. Certainly in a contest for this interesting prize, the states through which those rivers run have geographical advantages, the benefit of which they can lose only by supineness in themselves, or by extraordinary exertions in others. It is far from being impossible, that even the south-western parts of Pennsylvania may look down one of these rivers for their supplies of goods manufactured in Europe.

Let the importance attached by men best acquainted with the subject to the commerce of the west attest its value. The exertions which other states appear to be making to secure it, will probably awaken the attention of Virginia to that part of it which should naturally belong to her.

There is still another aspect in which this subject deserves to be viewed.

That intimate connection which generally attends free commercial intercourse, the strong ties which are formed by mutual interest, and the interchange of good offices, bind together individuals of different counties, and are well calculated to cherish those friendly sentiments, those amicable dispositions, which at present unite Virginia to a considerable portion of the western people. At all times the cultivation of these dispositions must be desirable but, in the vicissitude of human affairs, in that mysterious future, which is in reserve, and is yet hidden from us, events may occur to render their preservation too valuable to be estimated in dollars and cents.

The advantages which may result to Virginia, from opening this communication with the western country, will be shared in common with her by the states of Kentucky and Ohio.

Considering it as a medium for the introduction of foreign articles into those states, it has claims to their serious attention.

The proposition that a nation finds its true interest in multiplying its channels of importation, admitting them to be equally convenient, is believed to be incontrovertible. In addition to those arguments in support of this proposition which belong to every case, the situation of the western states suggests some which are peculiar to themselves, and which well deserve their consideration.

The whole of that extensive and fertile country, a country increasing in wealth and population with a rapidity which baffles calculation, must make its importations up the Mississippi alone, or through the Atlantic states. When we take into view the certain growth of the country, we can scarcely suppose it possible that any commercial city on the banks of that river can keep pace with that growth, and furnish a supply equal to the demand. The unfriendliness of the climate to human life, will agricultural capital still more sensible. It will tend render this disparity between the commercial and still more to retard a population of that sound mercantile character, which would render some great city on that majestic river, a safe emporium for the western world.

In times of profound peace, then, the states on the Ohio would make sacrifices of no inconsiderable magnitude, by restricting their importations to a single river. But, in time of war, their whole trade might be annihilated. When it is recollected that the Mississippi empties itself into the Gulph of Florida, which is surrounded by foreign territory; that the island of Cuba and the coast of East Florida completely guard the passage from its mouth to the ocean; that the immense commerce flowing down its stream, holds forth irresistible allurements to cruizers, the opinion seems well founded, that scarcely a vessel making for that place could reach its port of destination.

But the length of the voyage up the Mississippi and Ohio, must be attended with delay so inconvenient to persons engaged in commerce, as to render a shorter route, though not less expensive, more eligible. For importation of many articles, there is much reason to believe that a decided preference would always be given to the transportation through the United States, were that transportation rendered as easy as it is capable of being made.

The export trade during peace, so far as the articles exported were designed for a foreign market, would, more probably, pass exclusively down the Mississippi. But those articles which are consumed in the United States, as manufactures of hemp, would find their way to market through interior and shorter channels.

If the direct route through the Atlantic states would, for many purposes, be more eligible than that through the Gulph of Florida, which must be often connected with a coasting voyage to or from an Atlantic port, then the multiplication of those routes, if in themselves equal, by presenting a greater choice, and by accommodating more territory, must be desirable.

But your Commissioners are sanguine in the opinion, that the communication through the rivers they have viewed, if properly made, will possess advantages over every other, which cannot fail to recommend it to a large portion of the states of Kentucky and Ohio. All that part of the western country which draws its supplies and transports its produce through the river Ohio, and which lies east of Louisville and west of the Pennsylvania line, perhaps a part of the state of Pennsylvania itself, could probably use this route more advantageously than any other; unless, indeed, that through the Potowmac, connected with Monongehela, Cheat, or Yohaghena, should come into competition with it, for the eastern part of the country just mentioned.

That it would, for the importation of articles from Europe, and from the east, (with a few exceptions) and for the exportation of those which are consumed in the United States, be preferred to the voyage through the Mississippi, unless the introduction of steam boats should essentially vary the present state of things, may safely be assumed from the fact, that a land carriage between Pittsburg and Philadelphia or Baltimore, and a carriage up or down the Ohio, are now used for the purposes described, in preference to the route by New Orleans.

The present price for the transportation of goods from Philadelphia or Baltimore to Pittsburg, is understood to be from seven to ten dollars per hundred weight.

The price of transportation from Richmond, up James-river to the mouth of Dunlop's-creek, thence across the Alleghany to Greenbrier, and down to the mouth of the Great Kanhawa, will certainly depend on the goodness of the road and the degree of perfection to which the navigation may be carried. Your Commissioners believe that a sound national economy would dictate such improvements as would reduce the price of freight, although the labor employed in making them might be procured by an augmentation of toll, and some expenditure of public money.

Should the navigation of James-river be rendered as safe and as easy as may be reasonably expected, and the Greenbrier and New-river be improved, in such manner as the object will justify, your Commissioners believe they hazard nothing in saying, that the expense of transporting one hundred weight from Richmond to the mouth of the Great Kanhawa, will not exceed half the price of transporting the same weight from Baltimore or Philadelphia, to the same place.

The immense works meditated in New York, will certainly, if executed, give to that state great advantages in a competition for the trade of the lakes. But if other convenient and more direct channels be opened, it is not probable that the commerce of the Ohio will take the circuitous route by the lakes.

The expense of transportation from New York through the canal contemplated, can only be conjectured. The character of the rivers which would be used, is not well understood, but they must possess many advantages to give them a preference over the direct way through Virginia to the Ohio.

Your Commissioners, however, take the liberty to repeat, that the success of any attempt to obtain that share of the commerce of the west, to which this state, from her geographical situation and her rivers, would seem to be entitled, must depend entirely on the safety and cheapness of her navigation. A mode of transportation by water in itself insecure, or so laborious as to be little less expensive than carriage by land, will never change the channels in which this trade already flows.

The advantages to accrue to the United States, from opening this new channel of intercourse between the eastern and the western states, are those which necessarily result to the whole body from whatever benefits its members, and those which must result to the United States, particularly from every measure which tends to cement more closely the union of the eastern with the western states.

In those operations, too, which the exigencies of government may often require, this central channel of communication by water may be of great value. For the want of it, in the course of the last autumn, government was reduced to the necessity of transporting arms in waggons from Richmond to the falls of the great Kanhawa. A similar necessity may often recur.

NAMES OF OWNERS, ETC.

On the 19th day of July, 1911, the Board of Public Works of the State of West Virginia, adopted the following order:

> "WHEREAS, There has been much demand in connection with the Virginia Debt Suit for the names of the persons who are holders of the so-called 'West Virginia Deferred Certificates,' issued by the State of Virginia with respect to the one-third of Virginia's debt prior to January 1, 1861, which that State arbitrarily set aside as the portion of such debt that the State of West Virginia should assume; and,
>
> "WHEREAS, A list of the persons owning such certificates has been procured from Messrs. Brown Brothers & Company, of New York City, the depositary of such certificates, and from the Second Auditor of Virginia, so far as the names of such owners are known and can be procured; therefore, it is
> "Ordered, That the list of the names and the addresses of the owners of such certificates, so procured, and also the names and the addresses of the owners of the Virginia coupon bonds and certificates of registered stock held by citizens of West Virginia as appears in the Journal of the Constitutional Convention of 1872, be printed in pamphlet form, for free distribution among the people of this State, and that six thousand (6,000) copies of such pamphlet be published." (Record Board of Public Works, No. 6.)

Present interest in this matter arises largely from the suit of the Commonwealth of Virginia against the State of West Virginia, instituted in the Supreme Court of the United States in the year 1906, to recover from West Virginia her "equitable proportion" of the public debt of Virginia existing on the first day of January, 1861, and amounting then to the sum of $33,897,073.82.

Under the Funding Acts of the General Assembly of Virginia, passed in 1871, 1879, 1882 and 1892, Virginia undertook to fund said debt and accrued interest. The owners of the old bonds were required to surrender the same for cancellation, and accept for such old bonds new bonds for two-thirds of the amount of the old bonds and interest and a certificate for the other one-third, which one-third Virginia arbitrarily declared was the portion of the debt for which West Virginia was liable. These certificates are known as "Virginia Deferred Certificates," and often are called "West Virginia deferred Certificates."

After several years of effort these certificates were gathered together, and finally placed in the hands of Brown Brothers & Company, of New York City, as depositary, who, previous to the bringing of said suit, turned the same over to the Virginia Debt Commission. When the holder of any of these certificates turned the same over to the depositary, he received a receipt in the form of an engraved certificate, of which the following is a copy:

VIRGINIA DEBT CERTIFICATES.

No..... $.....

Receipt of

BROWN BROTHERS AND COMPANY.

This Certifies that Brown Brothers and Company have received the following certificate issued by the State of Virginia on account of that part of her Funded Debt assumed to be the proportion of the State of West Virginia, namely:

Certificate No.....

for ..... Dollars

....

Messrs. Brown Brothers and Company agree to hold said certificate in accordance with the terms of a certain agreement, dated July 15th, 1898, between John Crosby Brown, George Coppell, J. Kennedy Tod, and Clarence Cary, parties of the first part, and such persons as deposit their securities thereunder, parties of the second part. This receipt is negotiable, and all the interest of the owner of said certificate passes by the delivery hereof.

N. B. The deposited securities have been carefully examined, but no responsibility for their genuineness is undertaken by the issue of this certificate.

New York .....19..

It is understood that it is the above certificates of the depositary, which are negotiable and pass by delivery, that are listed and sold in the New York markets.

In connection with the above depositary's certificate, Brown

Brothers & Company, in a letter of March 15, 1911, to the Attorney General of West Virginia, says:

> "We regret to say that our records do not show the names or post office addresses of the certificate holders, either as of the first day of October, 1906, or of the first day of January, 1911, as you request. Our records show the names of the persons to whom Virginia issued the certificates, together with Virginia's number and the amount of each certificate respectively.
> "For your information we enclose cancelled copy of one of our receipts. These receipts are transferable by bearer and pass by delivery like any bearer bond.
>
> "The only method we have of communicating with holders of certificates is by advertising in the daily press of New York and London, as provided in the Depositing Contract.
> "We have had an estimate made of what it will cost to have the list of the holders of Virginia Certificates, as noted above, copied from our records for you, and are advised that the cost will be not to exceed $250. If you desire to have this information, and will advise us accordingly, we shall be pleased to have the work begun at once."

In a letter of March 24, 1911, Brown Brothers & Company say:

> "We can furnish you with the names (but not the addresses) of the persons to whom the State of Virginia issued the West Virginia Deferred Debt Certificates in so far as they have been deposited with us. Our Receipts are 'bearer' receipts, and our only means of communicating with the holders is by advertising.
> "Replying to your further question, our records do not show those persons residing in West Virginia who hold bonds and have not deposited them to receive certificates, and we have no means of ascertaining this information."

Again, in a letter of April 13, 1911, Brown Brothers & Company say:

> "As far as we are informed, a large part of the certificates deposited with us are held by the original holders of the old Virginia bonds, and have not been acquired by subsequent purchasers. These original holders will be shown by our list, but what transfers have been made will not be shown, for the reason stated in our previous letter."

The aid of the Virginia Debt Commission was invoked to obtain the names and addresses of the owners of the Virginia Deferred Certificates, but without success. Under date of January 18, and March 18, 1911, the Hon. John B. Moon, Chairman of that Commission, writes:

> "I beg to say that the exhibits show that certificates to the amount of $13,173,435.41, as of January 6th, 1906, had been deposited with the New York Depositing Committee, consisting of John Crosby Brown, chairman, R. P. Chew, Wm. C. Legendre, Clarence Carey, J. Kennedy Todd, George F. Baker and Bartlett S. Johnson; and of which committee Brown Brothers & Company were the depository; which certificates were on the date last named transferred to and placed at the disposal of the Virginia Commission, as shown in said exhibits.
> "Since the date last above named the said Depositing Committee have placed under the control and disposition of the Virginia Debt Commission $333,426.36 more of said certificates, upon the conditions above named, making the whole amount now under control of the Virginia Commission $13,506,861.77.
>
> "There were, as I understand it, a large number of receipts given by the above-named Depository of the Depositing Committee for these certificates, which were in large part for fractional amounts, and many of these receipts have doubtless been transferred since they were issued, so that a list of the original depositors would not be any certain guide as to the present claimants."
> "I do not believe that over $5000 or $7500 of these certificates appeared to come from any one in West Virginia, but this, of course, is only a matter of impression and belief on my part."

In response to a resolution of the West Virginia State Senate, adopted on February 4, 1911, the Attorney General of West Virginia stated:

> "The pleadings in the case do not disclose the names nor the residences of the holders of the Virginia, or so-called 'West Virginia certificates;' it was not a subject of inquiry referred to the Master in the order of reference entered by the court, and for that reason no evidence could be taken before the Master on that subject; after the completion of the Master's report counsel for West Virginia petitioned the Supreme Court of the United States on the 18th day of April, 1910, for the right to take testimony on matters not referred to said Special Master, the primary object of which was for the purpose of ascertaining the information asked for in section six of said Senate resolution, and after consideration of the petition the court refused to direct the taking of such testimony; subsequently the Attorney General endeavored to ascertain this information by letter and by personal application from the depositaries of such certificates in New York City, and from the Honorable John B. Moon, Chairman of the Virginia Debt Commission, and that such efforts have not been successful. The Attorney General, therefore, does not have such information and he is unable to furnish the same to your honorable body."

The Board of Public Works now exhibits to the public all the information it has in its possession respecting the ownership of said bonds, stocks and certificates, which is all it has been enabled to obtain; and begins with the list reported by the Hon. Arthur I. Boreman, the first Governor of the State, to the Constitutional Convention of 1872, (see pp. 78-85 of the Journal of the Constitutional Convention of 1872,) as follows:

GOVERNOR BOREMAN'S LIST.

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
WHEELING, February 22, 1869.

To the Senate and House of Delegates:

On the twenty-third day of January, 1868, the Legislature adopted the following resolution:

"Resolved by the Legislature of West Virginia:

"That the Governor of this State be requested to adopt such steps as he may deem proper and expedient to ascertain the amount of registered and coupon bonds of the State of Virginia, held and owned by citizens of the State of West Virginia, on the twentieth day of June, eighteen hundred and sixty-three, and still so held by citizens of this State, together with the names of the persons holding the same, and the several amounts held by them."

And on the sixth day of November, 1868, I sent a notice to, and had it published in, the newspapers in the different sections of the State, setting forth that on the first day of December, 1868, and thereafter until the first day of February, 1869, I should proceed to perform the duty devolved on the Governor by said resolution. A copy of which notice is hereto attached. I herewith transmit an account of the bonds presented to me, in pursuance of said resolution and notice, and which, in my judgment, are comprehended by the terms of the resolution. There were others presented, some of which were issued by Virginia during the rebellion, and others since, and others again, owned by persons who were not citizens of the state at the dates mentioned in the resolution, of which I have taken a description, but have not included them in the accompanying account because, in my opinion, they did not come within the terms of the said resolution.

A. I. BOREMAN.

(Copy of Notice to Bondholders.)

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
WHEELING, Nov. 6, 1868.

The undersigned will proceed, on the first day of December next, and thereafter until the first day of February, 1869, to perform the duty required of him by a resolution adopted by the Legislature of West Virginia, on the twenty-third day of January, 1868, which resolution is as follows:

> "Resolved by the Legislature of West Virginia:
> "That the Governor of this State be requested to adopt such steps as he may deem proper and expedient to ascertain the amount of registered and coupon bonds of the State of Virginia, held and owned by citizens of the State of West Virginia, on the twentieth day of June, eighteen hundred and sixty-three, and still so held by citizens of this State, together with the names of the persons holding the same, and the several amounts held by them."

The undersigned deems it his duty to inspect each bond before he can report its existence, and, therefore, the persons who hold bonds which they wish reported, under the above resolution, are required to produce the same, before the undersigned, in order that such inspection may be had.

An affidavit of the claimant, or some one else, will also be required that the bonds were "held by such claimant on the twentieth day of June, 1863," and "were still so held" by him or her on the day the above resolution was adopted, to-wit: On the twenty-third day of January, 1868, and that such claimant was a citizen of West Virginia on both of the days mentioned.

Effort was made to ascertain which of the foregoing bonds in Governor Boreman's list had been funded under the said Funding Acts of 1871, 1879, 1882 and 1892. For this purpose Governor Boreman's list was furnished to the Second Auditor of Virginia at Richmond. Under date of June 22, 1911, that office furnished the list following, headed "Second Auditor's List," accompanied by a letter, in which it was stated:

> "I traced the record of the bonds specified in the lists on pages 80 to 85 of the Journal of the Constitutional Convention, and have entered opposite each its history so far as it can be obtained. Several of the certificates I failed to locate for lack of sufficient data in your volume, to either start or guide me in tracing them. You will observe, however, that but few of them have not been funded since the publication of your list. I think it but reasonable to assume that those which I did not trace have, as others, been exchanged.
> "No State record contains the addresses of the former holders of bonds as specified, and, therefore, I am unable to furnish them, but as almost the entire number of these securities have changed both hands and form, perhaps several times since the publication of your list, I suppose the names and localities of the 1861 holders would avail you nothing now."

SECOND AUDITOR'S LIST.

"List of Virginia Coupon Bonds and certificates of Registered stock held by citizens of West Virginia and which have been presented and inspected by the Governor under Joint Resolution No. 2 of the Legislature, adopted January 23, 1868."

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1913.

No. 2, Original.

COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA

vs.

THE STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA

In Equity.

BEFORE

HON. CHARLES E. LITTLEFIELD,

MASTER.

At Richmond, Virginia,

August 17-19 and September 2-12, 1914.

VOLUME II.

DEFENDANT'S AND PLAINTIFF'S EXHIBITS.

NOTE.—A pink sheet sheet separates the index from "Defendant's Exhibits, 1901"; a blue sheet separates "Defendant's Exhibits, 1901" from "Defendant's Exhibits, 1905"; a green sheet separates "Defendant's Exhibits, 1905" from "Defendant's Exhibits, (Miscellaneous) 1901-1905"; a yellow sheet separates all of the Defendant's exhibits from those of the Plaintiff.

ERRATA.

On Page 83, Sheet 7 of Defendant's Exhibit No. 12, January 1, 1861, make from the fourth to the eleventh items inclusive, under column "Amount," read "$26,320.50" instead of "$26,350.50."

Omit the last four items on the same page, being two payments from Bank of Virginia and two payments from Exchange Bank, they having been previously entered on same exhibit.

Change total on same page from "$2,485,116.41" to "$2,484,876.41," to accord with above corrections.

(As reported by the superintendent, all records were in Alexandria, and as the war was on, he could only guess at the operating expenses; therefore, above statement is valueless. Earnings had increased 33% and his operating expenses $220,000. We therefore take the value of Sept. 30, 1860, as the measure of its value.)

James River & Kanawha Canal Company.

Statement of value of this property as it was absorbed and and capitalized by the Richmond & Alleghany Railroad.

1. First general balance sheet of the Richmond & Alleghany R. R., on file in the office of the Vice President of the Chesapeake & Ohio R. R., in the city of Richmond, shows, on page 11, amongst the assets of the Company the following entries, which, for convenience in this sheet, have been numbered—

1. J. R. & K. Co. & Buchanan & Clifton Forge R. R. Co. Liens with Trustee First Mortgage	$1,393,637 66
2. Franchises and right of way	5,588,609 76
3. Richmond Docks	1,000,000 00
Total	$7,982,247 42

Notes:

1. The liens on the James River & Kanawha assumed by the R. & A. amount to $1,394,026.00, as shown on detail of deed by which the property is transferred to the R. & A. It is, therefore, probable that that amount was all on account of the James River & Kanawha $1,393,637 66

2. Franchises and right of way—The distance from Richmond to Clifton Forge was 230.5 miles. I am informed at the C. & O. office that the distance has not been appreciably changed since that date, also that the distance from Buchanan to Clifton Forge is about 33 miles. Allowing that the Richmond dock property cut off the distance, say, 5 miles, we would have on a mileage basis approximately 85%. The report above referred to says, on page 5, "Acquired the property of the James River & Kanawha and the Buchanan and Clifton Forge R. R. at a cost in stock and bonds of $6,389,511.93, thus securing legal right of way for its railway lines, basin and docks in Richmond, and other property, including liens of

The Company, same page, same report, says it also expended $199,097.83 for "further right of way," making total right of way $6,588,609.76, $1,000,000 of which has been arbitrarily assigned to Richmond Docks and Basin, leaving the charge to Right of Way $5,588,609.76, as above. We proportion on the 85% the $5,389,511.93, giving us as the James River & Kanawha Canal proportion	4,581,085 14

The Richmond & Alleghany has in this balance sheet set up the "Manchester Water Power" for $197,277.00, which possibly may account for the smaller amount assigned directly to the Right of Way as above.

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA.

James River and Kanawha Company.

CHAP. 21.—An Act to amend the Charter of the James River and Kanawha Company.

Passed March 23, 1860.

1. Be it enacted by the general assembly, that the capital stock of the James river and Kanawha company be, and the same is hereby, increased to twelve million four hundred thousand dollars, in shares of one hundred dollars each.

2. That in addition to the shares now owned by the state in said company, the Board of public works be, and is hereby, directed to subscribe, on behalf of the commonwealth, for seventy-four thousand shares of said capital stock, which shall be declared by said company a six per cent. preferred stock, on which six dollars per share shall be paid to the holders thereof before any dividends shall be paid on other stock of said company; whereof seventy-two thousand shares shall be taken in full satisfaction of the debt now due from the said company to the state, and for the assumption by the state of the debt for which the state is bound as the surety for said company, and the annuity to the old James river company; and for the residue of two thousand shares, the bonds of the state for the aggregate amount of two hundred thousand dollars are to be delivered to the company, to be applied to the extinguishment of the floating debt of the company: provided, that an amount of said debt equal to the amount of said bonds, shall be extinguished thereby.

3. Upon the receipt of the certificates for the said seventy-two thousand shares of stock, the Board of public works shall give to the James river and Kanawha company a receipt in full for the said several debts due to the state, and for any claims against the company on account of the debts for which the state is responsible as security of the company, or on account of the annuity to the old James river company; and shall, by proper deeds, release to said company all liens, whether by deeds of trust, mortgages or otherwise, held by the state upon the works and property of the company, to secure any debt due to the state, or which may be guaranteed by the state.

4. Upon the receipt of the certificates for the said seventy-two thousand shares of the stock, the Board of public works is hereby directed, upon the surrender by the holders thereof, of any of the bonds of the James river and Kanawha company, for the payment of which the state is responsible, to issue to said holders a corresponding amount of the bonds of the state, made in the manner prescribed by law, payable thirty-four years after their date, and bearing interest at the rate of six per centum per annum, payable semi-annually. And the board shall thereupon cancel and file the bonds so surrendered, and deliver to the James river and Kanawha company a statement thereof, with the number, amount and date of each bond.

5. And upon the receipt of the certificates of the residue of two thousand shares of said stock, the Board of public works is directed to issue and deliver to the company the bonds of the state for the aggregate amount of two hundred thousand dollars, to be applied to the extinguishment of the floating debt of the company.

6. The James river and Kanawha company shall have authority to borrow money, at a rate of interest not exceeding seven per centum per annum, payable semi-annually, and not exceeding two million five hundred thousand dollars, for the purpose of completing the canal to Covington, carrying on their other works and paying the residue of their floating debt, and to execute bonds for the amount borrowed, and deeds of trust or mortgages, pledging their works, property and net revenues for the payment of the same: provided, that they shall not borrow in any one year a greater amount than five hundred thousand dollars. The said interest shall be paid semi-annually into the treasury of the commonwealth, for the benefit of the holders of said bonds, on or before the first day of January and July in each year; and the same shall be paid to the holders thereof, upon the warrant of the second auditor, out of said funds so paid into the treasury by said company.

7. The said company, after they may have issued such bonds, shall set apart, on the first day of January and July in each year, a fund not less than the rate of one per centum per annum for a sinking fund for the payment of the principal of such bonds, or such larger rate as may be necessary to provide a fund sufficient for such redemption, at the maturity of such bonds. And the amount to be set apart annually as a sinking fund, shall be paid by the company, one-half thereof on or before the first day of January and July in each year, to the commissioners of the Sinking fund, and invested by them in stocks, as required by the general law regulating the action of said commissioners, and the said commissioners shall keep an account of, and hold and apply the same to the redemption of said bonds, in pursuance of this act: and shall make report to the general assembly, at each session, of their proceedings under this act.

8. Nothing in this act contained shall be so construed as to render the state liable, in any manner whatever, otherwise than as a stockholder of the company, to the holders of any bonds executed for money borrowed under this act.

9. Be it further enacted, that there shall be issued to, and placed under the exclusive control of the Kanawha board of directors of said company, or their successors, as constituted under the act of the general assembly entitled an act providing more effectual means for the improvement of the navigation of the Kanawha river, passed fifteenth of February one thousand eight hundred and fifty-eight, three hundred thousand dollars of the six per cent. registered stock of the commonwealth, to be issued in the mode now provided by law, and the said stock so issued shall be used by said Kanawha board of directors for the improvement of the navigation of said river, from the mouth thereof to Loup creek shoals: provided, however, said Kanawha board shall not dispose of said registered stock at less than par. And said registered stock shall not be issued for an amount exceeding one hundred and fifty thousand dollars in any one year, nor exceeding twenty thousand dollars in any one month: But before any of said stock shall be issued, the said James river and Kanawha company, by the president thereof, shall execute a deed of trust or mortgage upon the works, property and net revenue of said Kanawha line of improvement, from the mouth thereof to said Loup creek shoals, to the commonwealth, for the payment of the principal and interest of said three hundred thousand dollars: or upon the failure or refusal of said company to execute such deed of trust or mortgage, when required by the Kanawha board, then the said Kanawha board, by their president pro tempore, or other agent, may execute such deed of trust or mortgage; and the same shall be deemed to have the same effect as though it had been executed by said company: and such lien shall take precedence over any lien created by said company, to secure their bonds authorized to be issued by this act. The said Kanawha board shall pay into the treasury of the commonwealth three and one half per centum on or before the fifteenth day of June and December of each year, on such amount of said registered stock as may be issued under this section, for interest, and to provide a sinking fund. The said Kanawha board are hereby authorized and directed to prosecute the construction of said Kanawha line of improvement, free from the control or direction of the president and directors of said James river and Kanawha company, and which is known as the "Eastern board," and shall have the entire control and management of the same, free from such control and direction.

10. The debts of said company, which may not be paid as authorized by this act, or if the holders thereof shall refuse to receive in payment thereof the seven per centum bonds of said company, authorized to be issued by this act, shall not, by reason of the passage of this act, be in any better condition for enforcing the payment thereof; but the liens of the commonwealth existing before the passage of this act, on the works, property and revenue of said improvement, shall, as to them, be deemed to be in full force.

11. The Board of public works shall appoint three proxies to represent the state at the meetings of the stockholders; and the proxies so appointed shall have power to cast three-fifths of all the votes cast in the appointment of the president and other officers elected by the company, except directors of said company, and in fixing the salaries of officers, and in all other questions arising in a meeting of stockholders, and shall allow to said proxies a reasonable compensation for their services. And authority is hereby given to the Board of public works to revise and alter the rates of toll charged by said company, and are directed so to do, so as to adapt them to a remunerative standard. If the location proposed for the line of the canal between the present terminus of the Virginia Central rail road at Jackson's river and the town of Covington, will interfere at any point with any proposed location of the extension of said rail road, and the engineers representing respectively the canal and the rail road cannot agree upon an independent location for each work at such points, then the Board of public works shall determine such location, having due regard to the interest of the commonwealth as a stockholder in each company; and their decision shall be binding.
having due regard to the interest of the commonwealth as a stockholder in each company; and their decision shall be binding.

12. In addition to the rights and powers heretofore granted to and conferred upon the James river company and the James river and Kanawha company, for the collection of tolls on the Kanawha river, the said James river and Kanawha company, their collectors and agents, are hereby authorized and empowered to sue out an attachment before any justice of the peace, against boats and cargoes upon the Kanawha river, for tolls due and unpaid by said boats and cargoes, their owners, masters or shippers.

13. That in case the said James river and Kanawha canal company shall not complete the canal to Covington, or the western terminus of the Virginia Central rail road, within six years from the passage of this act, without any further application to the general assembly for aid, either by loan from the state, subscription, or otherwise, all the property, rights, franchises, and privileges of every kind and description of the said company, shall be transferred to and become the property of the state: and provided further, that the said company shall have no authority to contract any greater amount of debts, or in any other manner than is authorized by the provisions of this bill without the consent of the general assembly; and before this act shall take effect or the Board of public works shall make the subscription to the stock of said company, authorized by it, or release or discharge the liens which the commonwealth holds on the property of the said company, the private stockholders of said company shall, in general meeting assembled, accept the provisions of this act, and duly certify their acceptance thereof to the Board of public works.

14 Be it further enacted, that before the provisions of this act shall take effect, the said James river and Kanawha company shall, in general meeting of the stockholders, accept the same, and such acceptance shall be deemed an acceptance of all the provisions of this act, and as a complete acquiescence in and recognition of all the authority and independent and other powers conferred upon the said Kanawha board by this act.

Statement showing Profit & Loss of the Orange & Alexandria Railroad Company to determine the value of said stock on opening of business Sept. 30, 1863.

1. Orange & Alexandria R. R. Co.	Par of Stock.	Profit.	Add Profits.	Profits to Date.	Book Value.
1860 Stock	$2,039,603 73	$ 28,242 34	$ 28,242 34	$135,515 49	$106 64
1861 Stock	2,058,007 07	263,909 85	As reported by the Supt. all records were in Alexandria and as the war was on he could only guess at the operating expenses; therefore, the above statement is valueless. Earnings had increased 33% and his operating expenses $220,000.00. The value of Sept. 30, 1860, is, therefore, taken as the measure of its worth.
1862 Stock	2,057,813 01	333,680 49	333,680 49	469,195 98	122 80
1863 Stock	2,058,794 30	236,538 57	236,538 57	705,296 40	134 25

This road did not declare any dividends during the years 1862 and 1863, hence the accumulations of profits.

Profits for the year 1862 have been added to total profits which had accumulated up to 1860, the profits for 1861 have not been considered, else the value of this stock would be greater than shown for 1863.

In 1863 the debt is in bills payable to a great extent, all of which have matured. Also coupons on different issues of bonds, interest on preferred stock and dividend script. The company now has means to liquidate all its indebtedness of this nature, but the parties holding the debt cannot be reached.

This statement is compiled from a report to the Board of Public Works of the State of Virginia, Document 15, pages 7 to 24, for 1862, and 25 to 39 for 1863, in a book labeled Documents, 1863-1864, on file in Washington, D. C., and sworn to by J. H. Reed, Treasurer, and H. W. Vandegrift, General Superintendent.

1862 No report could be found for this date and it is believed that no report was rendered for this year. In making computation for the year 1863, interest on floating debt and funded debt of 1861 and dividends declared in 1862, have been deducted from profits for 1863, in addition to the same deduction applicable in 1863, although profits (not ascertainable) have not been considered. It would appear, therefore, that these stocks are of greater value than that set forth herein.

Bonds		$ 574,921 48
Interest on same		50,417 64
Check		8 96
		$ 625,348 08
Tolls which had accrued prior to July 1, 1863 (for the quarter ended that date), were received subsequent to that date, and the portion of these tolls to June 20, 1863, is a proper claim.
March 2, 1864, Cash Book No. 10, Board of Public Works, shows a receipt of $6,576.50 for the period mentioned.
This sum proportioned to June 20, 1863, is.....		5,853 81

Acts of General Assembly of Virginia, 1881-82.

On pages 76-78 will be found the following Act approved February 9, 1882, pertaining to the State's interest in the Atlantic, Mississippi and Ohio Railroad, to-wit:

Chap. 77—An Act ratifying the sale by the Board of Public Works of the claim of the State against the Atlantic, Mississippi and Ohio Railroad.

Approved February 9, 1882.

Whereas the Board of Public Works of the State of Virginia, acting for said State, did, by agreement dated tenth February, anno domini eighteen hundred and eighty-one, grant, bargain, sell and assign to U. J. Boyce and F. J. Kimball, acting for themselves and their associates, in consideration of the sum of five hundred thousand dollars, to be paid as therein provided, all the right, title and interest of the State of Virginia in, or to, or against, the Atlantic, Mississippi and Ohio Railroad Company by virtue of the covenant or mortgage dated twenty-second December, eighteen hundred and seventy, made and executed by said company in accordance with the terms of the tenth section of an act of the general assembly of the State of Virginia, approved June seventeenth, anno domini, eighteen hundred and seventy, authorizing the formation of the Atlantic, Mississippi and Ohio Railroad Company; and whereas the said sale was by said agreement made subject to the condition that the said Boyce and Kimball, and their associates, should become the purchasers of the said railroad under the decree of sale entered by the Circuit Court for the Fourth Judicial Circuit and Eastern District of Virginia in the cause therein pending of William Butler Duncan and Samuel L. M. Barlow, surviving trustees, plaintiffs, against the said Atlantic, Mississippi and Ohio Railroad Company and other defendants, and upon the terms agreed upon between themselves and the president and board of directors of said company, and with the proviso that unless the said Boyce and Kimball and their associates should within ninety days from the date of said agreement, or as soon thereafter as said Circuit Court of the United States should confirm this purchase of said railroad, deposit with the Board of Public Works the sum of one hundred thousand dollars, in money or in public securities, satisfactory to said board, of the market value of one hundred thousand dollars, and should, on the ratification of said sale by the General Assembly of Virginia, pay over to said board, in cash, the further sum of four hundred thousand dollars, the balance of said purchase money, then the said agreement should be void, else to remain in full force and virtue; and whereas the said Boyce and Kimball and their associates, did become the purchasers of said Atlantic, Mississippi and Ohio Railroad and of the franchises and property of said railroad company at the foreclosure sale hereinbefore referred to, and have complied with the terms agreed upon between them and the president and board of directors of the Atlantic, Mississippi and Ohio Railroad Company, as by said contract with the Board of Public Works it was stipulated they should do in the event of their becoming such purchasers, which sale was ratified and confirmed by said United States Circuit Court, by virtue of which sale, and of the conveyance made pursuant thereto, the said Boyce and Kimball and their associates (of whom Clarence H. Clark was the one in whose name the purchase of said railroad was made), and become and are a corporation, by the name of The Norfolk and Western Railroad Company, which corporation has thus become entitled to the benefit of, and is bound by the agreement made as aforesaid with the Board of Public Works; and whereas the said sale of all the right, title and interest of the State of Virginia in, or to, or against the Atlantic, Mississippi and Ohio Railroad Company, made by the said Board of Public Works, to the said Boyce and Kimball and their associates, as hereinbefore recited, was made subject to the ratification of the General Assembly of Virginia, with a proviso that if the General Assembly of Virginia should fail to ratify and confirm the same at its then next session, the Board of Public Works should redeliver to the said Boyce and Kimball and their associates all the securities or money which should have been delivered or paid to said Board of Public Works by the said Boyce and Kimball and their associates under the terms of said agreement, together with the accrued interest thereon; and whereas the said Boyce and Kimball and their associates, by their corporate name and style of the Norfolk and Western Railroad Company, have fully complied with all the terms and conditions of said agreement, and did, on the tenth day of May, anno domini, eighteen hundred and eighty-one, in conformity therewith, deposit with the Board of Public Works of the State of Virginia, the sum of one hundred thousand dollars in lawful money of the United States, and are now ready and willing to pay the further sum of four hundred thousand dollars to the Board of Public Works, upon the ratification and confirmation by this General Assembly of said sale, made to them by the Board of Public Works, as hereinbefore recited and set forth; therefore,

1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Virginia, That the action of the Board of Public Works in making and executing on behalf of the State of Virginia the said agreement of February tenth, anno domini, eighteen hundred and eighty-one, with the said U. L. Boyce and F. J. Kimball, acting for themselves and their associates, and the sale and transfer thereby to the said Boyce and Kimball and their associates, of all the claim and demand, right and title, and interest of the State of Virginia in or to or against the Atlantic, Mississippi and Ohio Railroad Company, under or by virtue of the covenant or mortgage executed by said company, and in said agreement referred to, be, and the same is hereby fully approved, ratified and confirmed.

2. And be it further enacted, That upon the payment by the said Norfolk and Western Railroad Company to the Board of Public Works of the State of Virginia, of the balance of the said five hundred thousand dollars purchase money, after crediting said purchase with the one hundred thousand dollars deposited with the Board of Public Works, and with whatever interest shall have accrued upon said one hundred thousand dollars up to the date of the approval of this act, the said Norfolk and Western Railroad Company shall become and be the full and absolute owner of all rights, title and interest of the State of Virginia in or to, or against the Atlantic, Mississippi and Ohio Railroad Company, under or by virtue of the covenant or mortgage dated the twenty-second day of December, anno domini, eighteen hundred and seventy, and executed by and between said company and the Board of Public Works, in accordance with the terms of the tenth section of the act approved June seventeenth, anno domini, eighteen hundred and seventy, authorizing the formation of the Atlantic, Mississippi and Ohio Railroad Company, and of all the rights, title and interest of the State of Virginia, under and by virtue of the proceedings and decrees of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Fourth Judicial Circuit and Eastern District of Virginia, in the equity suit in the names of Duncan and Barlow, surviving trustees, and so forth, plaintiffs, against the Atlantic, Mississippi and Ohio Railroad Company and others, pending in said court, and also in the Supreme Court of the United States, and the Board of Public Works is directed to cause the appeal which has been taken on behalf of the State of Virginia to the Supreme Court of the United States from a decree rendered in said cause by said United States Circuit Court to be dismissed, or it shall, otherwise dispose of the same as the said Norfolk and Western Railroad Company may desire and request; and shall execute all such transfers, assignments and releases as may be necessary or proper to vest in and confirm to the said Norfolk and Western Railroad Company, all the rights and interests which it is the purpose of this act to assure to it; provided that the payment of the said balance of the five hundred thousand dollars shall be made on or before the first day of March, anno domini, eighteen hundred and eighty-two.

Reliable data could not be obtained to work up the book value of the stocks of these railroads as of 1862 and 1863, and it became necessary to quote the book value as of 1861.

It will be observed that the State of Virginia increased its holdings in the Virginia & Kentucky Railroad from Jan. 1, 1861 to June 20, 1863 to the extent of $21,438.08 and in the Norfolk & Petersburg R. R. $60,000. (Error in schedule 6 A for Jan. 1, 1861, should read par value of Norfolk & Petersburg R. R. Co. Stock, held by the State of Virginia $1,439,970.00, instead of $1,200,000.00.)

All of these roads and the loans made by the State of Virginia to them, were eventually turned over to the Atlantic, Mississippi & Ohio R. R. Co. in consideration of the purchase price $4,000,000.00, secured by a second mortgage.

This statement is therefore designed to show the value of the State of Virginia's holdings previous to the disposal of same.

2. Franchises and Right of Way—The distance from Richmond to Clifton Forge was 230.5 miles. I am informed at the Chesapeake & Ohio Office that the distance has not been appreciably changed since that date, also that the distance from Buchanan to Clifton Forge is about 33 miles. Acts of General Assembly 1861. Pages 70 to 82.

Chap. 56.—An Act to incorporate the Virginia Canal Company, and to transfer the Rights and Franchises of the James River and Kanawha Company thereto.

Passed March 29, 1861.

1.—Of the Incorporation of the Company.

Whereas the James River and Kanawha Company, at their called meeting in the month of August, eighteen hundred and sixty, authorized an agreement to be entered into, and which was executed by the president of said company in pursuance of such authority, between himself and Ernest de Bellot des Minieres, and his associates, under the firm and style of Bellot des Minieres, Brothers & Co. of France, and to which the Board of Public Works of this State gave its assent, as evidenced by the signature of its president thereto; which agreement is in the following words:

"An Executory Agreement, entered into this first day of September, in the year eighteen hundred and sixty, between Ernest de Bellow des Minieres, for himself and his associates, under the firm and style of Bellot des Minieres, Brothers and Company, of France, of the one part, and Thomas H. Ellis, president of the James River and Kanawha Company, for and on behalf of the said company, in pursuance of a resolution adopted by the stockholders of said company, in general meeting, on the thirtieth day of August, eighteen hundred and sixty, of the other part, witnesseth:

"Whereas it is a matter of the highest importance to the State of Virginia, that the water line between the Chesapeake Bay and the Ohio River, which will open the great west and southwest and its immense trade to the markets of the world by the shortest, cheapest, safest and most certain route, and lead to an incalculable increase of the direct foreign trade of Virginia, should be promptly completed, the parties of the first part desiring not only to secure to themselves and their associates the profits of the line when completed, but to France the primary advantages of the direct trade with her, which the line must establish, have proposed to purchase the line from Richmond to the Ohio River, with the right and obligation to complete the same, and the president of the James River and Kanawha Company, and the Board of Public Works of Virginia, concurring in these views, and sympathizing strongly with the parties of the first part, in their desire to establish direct trade with France, the ancient ally of the United States, the said president and directors of the James River and Kanawha Company, have entered into negotiation with the parties of the first part, and have, with the approbation of the Board of Public Works, entered into a provisional agreement with them, as herein set forth. And since it is necessary to procure the approval of the General Assembly to the said agreement, therefore, subject to said approval, the said James River and Kanawha Company do contract and agree with the said parties of the first part as follows—that is to say:

"1. A new company shall be formed by the name and style of 'The Virginia Canal Company,' with a capital stock of not less than twenty, nor more than thirty-five millions of dollars, in shares of one hundred dollars each; to which shall be transferred all the property and franchises of the James River and Kanawha Company—the stockholders in the James River and Kanawha Company, other than the Commonwealth of Virginia to have one share of stock in the said Virginia Canal Company for every two shares of stock they now hold; and the State to transfer to the said Virginia Canal Company all her rights as a stockholder in the said James River and Kanawha Company, upon condition that the new company perform and fulfill the terms and conditions hereinafter imposed.

"2. The Virginia Canal Company shall be organized with a charter similar to the original charter of the James River and Kanawha Company, with such modifications and additions as may be necessary and proper for adapting it to the purposes of the new organization.

"3. The Virginia Canal Company shall clear out the deposits in the present line from Richmond to Buchanan, and repair all the present works, that is, the embankments, aqueducts, bridges, culverts, waste weirs, locks, dams, houses and structures of every kind, repairing those wanting repairs only, and building anew the works requiring to be rebuilt, so that the whole line from Richmond to Buchanan shall be of a depth of not less than five feet at any point, and in all respects in a perfect state of repair.

"4. They shall keep on all the line a sufficient number of dredge boats to keep the water way continually free from deposit and obstructions of every kind, and a sufficient number of extra lock gates and wickets ready to be inserted in case of accident. They shall likewise have weigh locks at not less than three points on the line.

"5. They shall complete the water line of improvement from Buchanan to the Kanawha River, and the improvement of the Kanawha River, so as to make a continuous water line from tidewater at Richmond to the Ohio River; constructing the works on the general plan of the part of the improvement that has already been made, but with the following modifications, to-wit:

"The locks from Buchanan to the Greenbrier River shall be not less than one hundred and twenty feet long between the gates, by twenty feet wide in the clear, and on the Greenbrier and New Rivers, and on the Kanawha River at and above Lykens' shoals, not less than two hundred feet long between the gates, by forty feet wide in the clear, and the works from Buchanan to the foot of Lykens' shoals on the Kanawha River shall be so constructed as to give a depth of water of not less than seven feet at any point.

"The Kanawha River to be improved from Lykens' shoals to its mouth in such a manner as to secure a depth of water of not less than six feet at all seasons of the year; the channel through the shoals to be eighty feet wide at the bottom, and one hundred and four feet at the top.

"The capacity of the improvement from Richmond to Buchanan shall be enlarged by increasing the depth of the water to not less than seven feet at any point, and by increasing the dimensions of all the present locks to not less than one hundred and twenty feet long between the gates, by twenty feet wide in the clear, or by doubling the locks, and making the new locks of the dimensions aforesaid. But the increase in the dimensions or the doubling of the locks, need not be made, until the locks require reconstruction or the trade of the canal shall demand it.

"The capacity of the Tidewater connection and Richmond dock shall be enlarged, so as to afford adequate accommodation to the trade of the line, by opening a second communication with tidewater by the route of the Haxall Canal, or other suitable route; or instead of that, enlarging or doubling the present locks between the basin and the dock, as well as the present ship lock, in such manner as may be necessary to obtain a proper result; and by constructing all such other works as may be necessary for enlarging the capacity of the dock and tidewater connection for the purpose aforesaid.

"6. The said Virginia Canal Company shall issue to the respective stockholders in the James River and Kanawha Company, other than the State, certificates of stock at the rate of one share in the new company for every two shares held by them in the James River and Kanawha Company, which shall be full satisfaction of all their interest in the last mentioned company; and they shall pay annually to the holders of such certificates, five per centum per annum on the amounts thereof, from the date of the organization of the new company, until the line shall be completed to the Ohio River in the manner before mentioned, and thereafter in lieu of the said five per cent. shall pay them their ratable share of the profits of the company.

"7. The stockholders in the Virginia Canal Company shall enjoy equal rights, except as provided in the next preceding section.

"8. The tolls on the line shall be regulated by the Board of Public Works, or such other authority as the General Assembly may substitute for the control and superintendence of the public works of Virginia: provided, that during the construction of the work the tolls shall not exceed two and a half cents per ton per mile, nor be less than one cent per ton per mile on merchandise and manufactures; shall not exceed one and a half cents per ton per mile, nor be less than five mills per ton per mile on agricultural products; shall not exceed one cent per ton per mile, nor be less than two and a half mills per ton per mile on products of mines and forests; and after the completion of the improvement to the Ohio River, shall not exceed two cents per ton per mile, nor be less than five mills per ton per mile on merchandise and manufactures; shall not exceed one cent per ton per mile, nor be less than two and a half mills per ton per mile on agricultural products; and shall not exceed five mills per ton per mile, nor be less than two and a half mills per ton per mile on products of mines and forests: provided, that these rates shall apply to the through rates, but the tolls on the way trade may be increased one-third: and provided, further, that the toll may be brought below the minimum rate on any article, by the said board or other authority, with the consent of the Virginia Canal Company.

"9. The board for the management of the company shall consist of a president and seven directors, with the privilege to the company to increase the number of directors to twelve; two of the directors shall be appointed by the State of Virginia in such manner as she may by law provide; the other directors shall be appointed by the stockholders, and the president shall also be appointed by the stockholders, but his appointment shall be subject to the approval of the State in such manner as she may by law provide.

"10. The office of the new company shall be at Richmond, Virginia, but a branch may be located at Paris; the dividends and other dues to the American stockholders shall be paid at the office in Richmond. But the dividends and dues of the other stockholders may be paid in Paris or elsewhere, at the pleasure of the new company.

"11. A majority of the directors shall always be present to constitute a board. The proceedings of the board shall be recorded in the English language, at the office in Richmond, and be at all times open to the inspection of the stockholders, and the State, by such officer as she may appoint.

"12. The said Virginia Canal Company shall be organized within six months from the passage of the act of the Legislature incorporating it, and within the same time shall commence bona fide the work of construction at Buchanan and on the Kanawha River, and shall also within the same time commence bona fide the repairs of the line between Richmond and Buchanan; and shall complete the construction of the line to Covington and the repairs of the line from Richmond to Buchanan, within three years from the time of commencement aforesaid, and complete the Kanawha improvement from Loup Creek shoals to the mouth of the river within four years from the time of commencement aforesaid; and shall complete the entire line from Richmond to the mouth of the Kanawha River, in all respects, except the enlargement of the capacity of the canal from Richmond to Buchanan, within eight years from the time of commencement aforesaid; and shall complete the enlargement of the capacity of the Richmond dock and tidewater connection, as well as the enlargement of the capacity of the canal from Richmond to Buchanan, by deepening the canal, as herein above provided, within ten years from the said time of commencement.

"13. The said company shall not have the power by mortgage, deed of trust, or other contract, to create a lien upon its works and property, except that hereinafter created in favor of the Commonwealth of Virginia, and shall not be competent to sell the same without the assent of the General Assembly of Virginia.

"14. The said company shall, in consideration of the transfer aforesaid by the State of Virginia of all her rights as a stockholder in the James River and Kanawha Company, pay into the treasury of the State, semi-annually forever, the sum of sixty-seven thousand five hundred dollars; and as a guarantee for the faithful compliance with the stipulations of this agreement, they shall deposit with the treasurer of Virginia the sum of one million of dollars in the six per cent. registered stock of the Commonwealth of Virginia, to be held by him upon the following terms and conditions, that is to say: The interest upon the said stock, while on deposit, shall be paid to the said company. When the canal shall have been completed to the town of Covington, and the Kanawha improvement completed from Loup Creek shoal to the mouth of the river, if within the times prescribed, one-half of the said sum shall be returned to the said company: provided, the annuity to the State of Virginia, and the five per centum interest to the private stockholders, hereinbefore provided for, shall have been punctually paid; and if the same shall not have been punctually paid, then so much of the said sum of one million of dollars as may be necessary shall be appropriated to the payment of the same, and the residue returned to the said M. de Bellot des Minieres and his associates, or to the Virginia Canal Company, as may be proper; but if the said company shall fail to complete the construction of the line to Covington, and the repairs of the line from Richmond to Buchanan, within three years from the time of the commencement herein prescribed, or shall fail to complete the Kanawha improvement from Loup Creek shoals to the mouth of the river within four years from the time of commencement herein prescribed, or shall fail to complete the entire line from Richmond to the mouth of Kanawha River, in all respects, except the enlargement of the capacity of the canal from Richmond to Buchanan, within eight years from the time of commencement herein prescribed, or shall fail to complete the enlargement of the Richmond dock and tidewater connection, as well as the deepening of the canal to Buchanan, within ten years from the time of commencement herein prescribed, the sum of one million of dollars shall be retained and paid to the Commonwealth of Virginia as stipulated damages in money for such failure; and all the work which may have been done in repair and construction, as well as all the rights which the said Virginia Canal Company shall have acquired in the property and franchises of the James River and Kanawha Company, shall be forfeited, and revert to the latter company as at present organized, which company shall be thereupon reinstated in all its rights, as if this arrangement had never been made, and shall have full right and authority to re-enter upon and resume the control of the whole line of improvement; and for that purpose, the present organization of the James River and Kanawha Company shall be continued: provided, however, that if the said Virginia Canal Company shall be unable to complete the said water line improvement from Richmond to the Ohio River within eight years as aforesaid, or to complete the enlargement of the Richmond dock and tidewater connection, and deepening of the canal from Richmond to Buchanan, within ten years as aforesaid, they may have two years' extension of time in each case, by paying into the treasury of the Commonwealth of Virginia, for the said Commonwealth, before the expiration of the said period of eight years, a half million of dollars, if they require the extension of time for the completion of the water line as well as for the said enlargement; or by so paying one hundred thousand dollars before the expiration of ten years, if they require the extension of time only as to the enlargement aforesaid; which said sums are agreed upon as liquidated damages to be paid to the said Commonwealth in the contingencies aforesaid, for the loss sustained by such delay or delays in the completion of the said works as herein required; provided, however, that if the said Virginia Canal Company shall have proceeded in good faith to execute the said works, then the General Assembly may suspend the said forfeiture, and allow to the said company such further time as to it may seem just and proper, to complete the said works.

"15. The said Bellot des Minieres, Brothers and Company shall pay to the Commonwealth of Virginia so much of the three hundred thousand dollars of State bonds appropriated by the act of the General Assembly of Virginia, passed March twenty-third, eighteen hundred and sixty, for the improvement of the Kanawha River, as shall have been issued and sold, and expended bona fide on the improvement when they shall become entitled to the property and revenues of the James River and Kanawha Company; and upon payment thereof, the said Commonwealth shall release the mortgage given by the said James River and Kanawha Company on the said Kanawha improvement to secure the payment of the said bonds.

"16. As soon as the said M. de Bellot des Minieres and his associates shall have been regularly incorporated according to the laws of France and Virginia, and satisfactory authentication of that fact communicated to the president of the James River and Kanawha Company and the Board of Public Works, and shall have deposited with the treasurer of Virginia one million of dollars in the six per cent. registered stock of the Commonwealth, and shall have deposited in one or more of the banks of the city of Richmond, to the credit of the president and directors of the James River and Kanawha Company for the purpose of paying the floating debt of the company, the sum of four hundred thousand dollars, to be applied to the payment of the said floating debt as far as necessary, and the balance, if any, to be returned to them; and shall also pay into the treasury of Virginia the amount agreed to be paid by them under the next preceding section—then the James River and Kanawha Company shall by proper deeds convey its entire property of every kind, to the said Virginia Canal Company, subject to the charges before mentioned in favor of the present private stockholders and the Commonwealth of Virginia, and subject to any present subsisting contracts for the use of the water of the canal, and subject to all the provisions of this agreement: And until this conveyance shall be made, the James River and Kanawha Company shall manage the said property, effects and revenues under the existing laws, the said M. de Bellot des Minieres and his associates furnishing all the means and money that may be necessary to carry on the business of the company, complete Bosher's dam, the Joshua Falls dam, the dam at Lynchburg, and the North River improvement, and keeping the canal in proper repair—they receiving credit for all the revenues of the company. But the president and directors of the present company shall have no power or authority to charge the property of the company with any debt, except for the purpose of keeping the line in proper repair and working condition, and completing the dams and North River improvement, as hereinbefore mentioned.

"17. The said Virginia Canal Company may at any time discharge itself from the annuity to the State of Virginia, by the payment into the treasury of Virginia of the sum of two million two hundred and fifty thousand dollars in specie, but until the same shall be paid, the annuity of one hundred and thirty-five thousand dollars to the Commonwealth shall be forever a charge upon the whole property of the company, and the Legislature may provide by law in what manner the payment of the said annuity shall be enforced.

"18. The European parties and stockholders may, as between themselves, determine what the relative rights and obligations shall be.

"19. The stockholders in the Virginia Canal Company shall be required by their charter to hold at least one general meeting every year in the city of Richmond.

"20. When this agreement shall be approved by the General Assembly and a charter shall be granted as provided in the first and second sections thereof, the said agreement shall be binding upon all the parties thereto, without any further action on the part of the stockholders or directors of the James River and Kanawha Company; and the said James River and Kanawha Company binds itself to use its best efforts to obtain at the earliest day possible, the approval of this agreement and of the charter as provided for, by the General Assembly; and in the meantime the said agreement shall be obligatory upon the said James River and Kanawha company to the full extent that the said company has the legal authority to act without the approval of the General Assembly.

"And to prevent delay in the commencement of the works hereinbefore contracted to be executed, the said parties of the first part shall be authorized to proceed forthwith in their said undertaking; and if the General Assembly shall fail to approve the said agreement, and to grant said charter, then the James River and Kanawha Company binds itself to issue bonds under the act of the twenty-third day of March, eighteen hundred and sixty, to the said parties of the first part for an amount equal to the principal sum which may have been expended upon its works as contemplated in this agreement, and the interest thereon from the time when the same shall have been expended until the repayment in bonds as aforesaid; and the said James River and Kanawha Company shall thereupon be restored to all the rights conferred by its charter, as if this contract had not been made, and the said contract shall thereafter be null and void.

"In testimony whereof, the said Ernest de Bellot des Minieres, acting for himself and the firm of Bellot des Minieres, Brothers and Company, hath hereto subscribed his name and annexed his seal, and the said Thomas H. Ellis, president of the James River and Kanawha Company, acting under authority as aforesaid, hath subscribed his name and caused the seal of the company to be affixed, the day and year first above written, at Richmond, Virginia.

And whereas the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Virginia approved the object and views of the contracting parties, and are disposed to give to their contract validity and effect, except so far as it may be modified by this act: Therefore,

COMPANY INCORPORATED; GENERAL POWERS; RESTRICTIONS THEREON.

1. Be it enacted, that when the Board of Public Works shall be satisfied that the minimum capital of twenty millions of dollars has been raised as provided for in the next chapter, then, in compliance with the first article of said agreement, the persons constituting the firm and style of Bellot des Minieres, Brothers & Co. and such persons as they may admit into association with them, together with the corporate and individual stockholders of the present James River and Kanawha Company (other than the Commonwealth of Virginia), and such persons as may become subscribers to the capital stock hereafter authorized, and their successors and assigns, shall be and are hereby incorporated into a company by the name and style of "The Virginia Canal Company;" and by that name shall have perpetual succession and a common seal, may sue and be sued, plead and be impleaded, purchase and hold, sell and convey real and personal property; and shall be, to every intent and purpose in law, the successors of the present James River and Kanawha Company: provided, that the corporate powers shall not take effect until the minimum stock shall be taken: provided, however, that they shall hold no real estate, except that which by this Company, subject to the charges before mentioned in favor of the present act, or some other act of the General Assembly, may be vested in them, or they may be authorized to acquire for the purpose of the improvements which they are required to make; and that they shall in no wise deal as bankers or merchants or in buying and selling any produce or commodities whatsoever, except such as is obviously convenient and proper for them to purchase and sell in the regular performance of the duties required of them by this act; and that they shall not be engaged in the establishment or conduct of manufactures, further than for the supply of their own consumption and that of the persons in their service, and in letting to farm or lease sites for mills and other machinery, and water for their use.

2. The stockholders in general meeting shall have power to make all such by-laws, rules and regulations, not inconsistent with the constitution or laws of the land, as they may deem proper, for the well ordering of the affairs of the company; for the protection and preservation of their property, and for the maintenance of good order and good police among officers, agents, servants and laborers, and among the boatmen and others who use their canal and other works.

3. The said company shall not subscribe to the stock of any other company, unless it be specially allowed by law; but this prohibition shall not prevent it from receiving stocks or other property in satisfaction of any judgment, order or decree, or as collateral security for or in payment of any debt, or from purchasing stock or other property at any sale made for its benefit. If it so receives shares of its own stock, it may either extinguish the same or sell and transfer such shares to a purchaser. While, however, it holds such shares of its own stock, no vote shall be given thereon.

WORKS AND PROPERTY NOT TO BE ENCUMBERED OR SOLD.

4. The said company shall not have the power, by mortgage, deed of trust or other contracts, to create a lien upon its works and property, except that hereinafter created in favor of the Commonwealth of Virginia, and shall not be competent to sell the same without the assent of the General Assembly of Virginia.

PROVISION FOR REPAYMENT OF MONEY EXPENDED ON KANAWHA IMPROVEMENT.

5. The Kanawha River shall remain subject to all the existing laws in relation thereto, and unaffected by this act, until the completion of the work now under contract and in progress upon said river; provided, such work shall be completed before the first day of January, eighteen hundred and sixty-three; but when the said Virginia Canal Company shall be fully organized and vested with the control of the residue of the line other than the Kanawha River, the term of office of the present members of the Kanawha board shall expire, and members of said board shall be appointed, two by the Virginia Canal Company, and three by the Board of Public Works, whose term of office shall be the same as now prescribed by law, all of whom shall be citizens of the State, and residents of the Kanawha Valley; and the present members of the Kanawha board may be reappointed as members of the new board, and such new Kanawha board shall have control of the Kanawha River until the payment by the Virginia Canal Company of the money hereinafter provided to be paid on account of the Kanawha River. Immediately after the completion of the work now in progress on the Kanawha River, or on the first day of January, eighteen hundred and sixty-three, if such work shall not be completed before that time, the said Virginia Canal Company shall pay to the Commonwealth of Virginia so much of the appropriation of March twenty-third, eighteen hundred and sixty, for the improvement of the Kanawha River, as may have been bona fide expended in the construction of said improvement; and upon payment of said amount, the said Virginia Canal Company, by the operation of this act and the conveyance hereinafter authorized, shall be invested with all the rights, powers, franchises and privileges of the James River and Kanawha Company, in and to said Kanawha River; and upon such payment, the said Commonwealth shall release the mortgage given by the said James River and Kanawha Company on the said Kanawha improvement, to secure the payment of the said bonds. Such release shall be executed by the Board of Public Works as soon as satisfactory evidence is submitted to them of the payment aforesaid.

TRANSFER OF WORKS BY JAMES RIVER AND KANAWHA COMPANY; PRECEDENT CONDITIONS.

6. When the Board of Public Works shall be satisfied that the minimum capital as provided in the next chapter, has been raised as therein required, and the said M. de Bellot des Minieres and his associates shall have deposited with the State of Virginia, in the manner prescribed by law, one million of dollars in the six per cent. registered stock of the Commonwealth, and shall have deposited in one or more of the banks of the city of Richmond, to the credit of the president and directors of the James River and Kanawha Company, for the purpose of paying the floating debt of that company, the sum of four hundred thousand dollars, to be applied to the payment of the said floating debt as far as necessary, and the balance, if any, to be returned to the said M. de Bellot des Minieres and his associates, and satisfactory evidence of the performance of said conditions shall have been furnished the Board of Public Works, then the said James River and Kanawha Company shall, by proper deeds, convey its entire property, privileges and franchises of every kind to the said Virginia Canal Company, subject to the provisions and requirements of the fifth section of this chapter, and to the conditions hereafter required in this act, and also to any present subsisting contracts for the use of the water of the canal, or for any other purpose.

SUITS DEPENDING; HOW PROCEEDED WITH.

7. All causes and matters which shall be depending and undetermined in any court in this Commonwealth, in which the James River and Kanawha Company are or may be parties, plaintiff or defendant, on the day when the said transfer is made, shall be proceeded in, tried and determined as if the same had been commenced by or against the said Virginia Canal Company.

TRANSFER OF RIGHTS OF STATE OF VIRGINIA AND RELEASE OF ITS SECURITIES: CONDITIONS.

8. When the Board of Public Works shall be satisfied that the conditions prescribed in the sixth section have been fully complied with, and that the minimum capital, as provided for in the next chapter, shall have been raised as therein required, they shall transfer in like manner to the said Virginia Canal Company, all the rights which the State of Virginia has as a stockholder in the James River and Kanawha Company; and shall furthermore release all mortgages, deeds of trust or other contracts, except the mortgage relative to the Kanawha River, by which any lien has been created to the Commonwealth upon the works and property of the said James River and Kanawa Company, subject only to the encumbrances, limitations and restrictions by this act imposed.

RIGHTS OF NEW COMPANY AFTER TRANSFER.

9. The company hereby incorporated, thenceforward shall be entitled to all the tolls, rents and others emoluments, rights, franchises, privileges and immunities, which are now enjoyed by the said James River and Kanawha Company, subject to the provisions and limitations of the fifth section of this chapter. And the president and directors of the new company, their officers and agents, shall take possession of the property and works transferred as aforesaid, for the benefit of the Virginia Canal Company.

ANNUITY TO THE STATE.

10. The said Virginia Canal Company shall, in consideration of the transfer aforesaid, by the State of Virginia, pay into the treasury of the State, in the mode prescribed by law, semi-annually forever, the sum of sixty-seven thousand five hundred dollars. But the said company may at any time discharge itself from the said annuity by the payment into the said treasury of the sum of two million two hundred and fifty thousand dollars in specie; but until the same shall be paid, the said annuity shall be forever a charge upon the whole property and franchises of the company; and the Legislature may provide by law in what manner the payment of the said annuity shall be enforced.

SUM TO BE PAID TO OTHER STOCKHOLDERS.

11. The Virginia Canal Company shall furthermore take the said property so to be transferred to them, subject to the payment, to the corporate and individual stockholders mentioned in the second chapter, of five per centum per annum on the amounts of the certificates of stock held by each respectively, to be computed from the date of the organization of the said Virginia Canal Company, until the water line hereinafter mentioned shall be completed to the Ohio River, as herein prescribed; and thereafter, in lieu of the said five per cent., shall pay to the said stockholders their ratable share of the profits of the company. And for failure to perform this provision, the company may be proceeded against as provided hereafter in the seventh chapter.

Minieres, Brothers and Company, of France, of the one part, and Thomas H. Ellis, president of the James River and Kanawha Company, for and on behalf of the said company in pursuance of a resolution adopted by the stockholders of said company, in general meeting, on the thirtieth day of August, eighteen hundred and sixty, of the other part, witnesseth:

"Whereas it is a matter of the highest importance to the State of Virginia, that the water line between the Chesapeake Bay and Ohio River, which will open the great West and Southwest and its immense trade to the markets of the world, by the shortest, cheapest, safest and most certain route, and lead to an incalculable increase of the direct foreign trade of Virginia, should be promptly completed, the parties of the first part desiring not only to secure to themselves and their associates the profits of the line when completed, but to France the primary advantage of the direct trade with her, which the line must establish, have proposed to purchase the line from Richmond to the Ohio River, with the right and obligation to complete the same; and the president and directors of the James River and Kanawha Company and the Board of Public Works of Virginia concurring in these views, and sympathizing strongly with the parties of the first part, in their desire to establish direct trade with France, the ancient ally of the United States, the said president and directors of the James River and Kanawha Company have entered into negotiations with the parties of the first part, and have, with the approbation of the Board of Public Works, entered into a provisional agreement with them as herein set forth. And since it is necessary to procure the approval of the General Assembly to the said agreement, therefore, subject to said approval, the said James River and Kanawha Company do contract and agree with the said parties of the first part as follows; that is to say:

"1. A new company shall be formed, by the name and style of The Virginia Canal Company, with a capital stock of not less than twenty nor more than thirty-five millions of dollars, in shares of one hundred dollars each; to which shall be transferred all the property and franchises of the James River and Kanawha Company: the stockholders in the James River and Kanawha Company, other than the Commonwealth of Virginia, to have one share of stock in the said Virginia Canal Company for every two shares of stock they now hold; and the State to transfer to the said Virginia Canal Company all her rights as a stockholder in the James River and Kanawha Company upon condition that the new company perform and fulfill the terms and conditions hereinafter imposed.

"2. The Virginia Canal Company shall be organized with a charter similar to the original charter of the James River and Kanawha Company, with such modifications and additions as may be necessary and proper for adapting it to the purpose of the new organization.

"3. The Virginia Canal Company shall clear out the deposits in the present line from Richmond to Buchanan, and repair all the present works: that is, the embankment, aqueducts, bridges, culverts, waste weirs, locks, dams, houses and structures of every kind, repairing those wanting repairs only, and building anew the works requiring to be rebuilt, so that the whole line from Richmond to Buchanan shall be of a depth of not less than five feet at any point, and in all respects in a perfect state of repair.

"4. They shall keep on all the line a sufficient number of dredge boats to keep the water way continually free from deposits and obstructions of every kind, and a sufficient number of extra lock gates and wickets ready to be inserted in case of accident. They shall likewise have weigh locks at not less than three points on the line.

"5. They shall complete the water line of improvement from Buchanan to the Kanawha River, and the improvement of the Kanawha River, so as to make a continuous water line from tidewater at Richmond to the Ohio River, constructing the works on the general plan of the part of the improvement that has already been made, but with the following modifications, to-wit:

"The locks from the Buchanan to the Greenbrier River shall be not less than one hundred and twenty feet long between the gates, by twenty feet wide in the clear, and on the Greenbrier and New Rivers, and on the Kanawha River at and above Lykens' shoals, not less than two hundred feet long between the gates, by forty feet wide in the clear, and the works from Buchanan to the foot of Lykens' shoals on the Kanawha River shall be so constructed as to give a depth of water of not less than seven feet at any point.

"The Kanawha River to be improved from Lykens' shoals to its mouth, in such manner as to secure a depth of water of not less than six feet at all seasons of the year; the channel through the shoals to be eighty feet wide at the bottom and one hundred and four feet wide at the top.

"The capacity of the improvement from Richmond to Buchanan shall be enlarged by increasing the depth of the water to not less than seven feet at any point, and by increasing the dimensions of all the present locks to not less than one hundred and twenty feet long between the gates, by twenty feet wide in the clear, or by doubling the locks, and making the new locks of the dimensions aforesaid. But the increase in the dimensions or the doubling of the locks need not be made until the locks require reconstruction or the trade of the canal shall demand it.

"The capacity of the tidewater connection and the Richmond dock shall be enlarged so as to afford adequate accommodation to the trade of the line, by opening a second communication with the tidewater by the route of the Haxall Canal, or other suitable route; or instead of that, enlarging or doubling the present locks between the basin and the dock, as well as the present shiplock, in such manner as may be necessary to obtain a proper result; and by constructing all such other works as may be necessary for enlarging the capacity of the docks and tidewater connection for the purpose aforesaid."

"6. The said Virginia Canal Company shall issue to the respective stockholders in the James River and Kanawha Company, other than the State, certificates of stock at the rate of one share in the new company for every two shares held by them in the James River and Kanawha Company, which shall be full satisfaction of all their interests in the last mentioned company; and they shall pay annually to the holders of such certificates five per centum per annum on the amounts thereof, from the date of the organization of the new company until the line shall be completed to the Ohio River in the manner before mentioned; and thereafter, in lieu of the said five per centum, shall pay them their ratable share of the profits of the company.

"7. The stockholders in the Virginia Canal Company shall enjoy equal rights, except as provided in the next preceding section.

"8. The tolls on the line shall be regulated by the Board of Public Works, or such other authority as the General Assembly may substitute for the control and superintendence of the public works of Virginia, provided, that during the construction of the work the tolls shall not exceed two and one-half cents per ton per mile, nor be less than one cent per ton per mile on merchandise and manufactures; shall not exceed one and a half cents per ton per mile, nor be less than five mills per ton per mile on agricultural products; shall not exceed one cent per ton per mile, nor be less than two and a half mills per ton per mile on products of mines and forests; and after the completion of the improvement to the Ohio River, shall not exceed two cents per ton per mile, nor be less than five mills per ton per mile on merchandise and manufactures, shall not exceed one cent per ton per mile, nor be less than two and a half mills per ton per mile on agricultural products; and shall not exceed five mills per ton per mile, nor be less than two and a half mills per ton per mile on products of mines and forests: provided, that these rates shall apply to the through rates, but the tolls on the way trade may be increased one-third; and provided, further, that the tolls may be brought below the minimum rate on any article, by the said board or authority, with the consent of the Virginia Canal Company.

"9. The board for the management of the company shall consist of a president and seven directors, with the privilege to the company to increase the number of directors to twelve; two of the directors shall be appointed by the State of Virginia in such manner as she may by law provide; the other directors shall be appointed by the stockholders, and the president shall also be appointed by the stockholders; but his appointment shall be subject to the approval of the State, in such manner as she may by law provide.

"10. The office of the new company shall be at Richmond, Virginia, but a branch may be located at Paris. The dividends and other dues to the American stockholders shall be paid at the office in Richmond; but the dividends and dues of the other stockholders may be paid in Paris, or elsewhere, at the pleasure of the new company.

"11. A majority of the directors shall always be present to constitute a board. The proceedings of the board shall be recorded in the English language, at the office in Richmond, and be at all times open to the inspec-

"12. The said Virginia Canal Company shall be organized within six months from the passage of the act of the Legislature incorporating it, and within the same time shall commence bona fide the work of construction at Buchanan and on the Kanawha River; and shall also, within the same time, commence bona fide the repairs of the line between Richmond and Buchanan; and shall complete the construction of the line to Covington and the repairs of the line from Richmond to Buchanan, within three years from the time of commencement aforesaid, and to complete the Kanawha improvement from Loup Creek shoals to the mouth of the river within four years from the time of commencement aforesaid; and shall complete the entire line from Richmond to the mouth of the Kanawha River, in all respects, except the enlargement of the capacity of the canal from Richmond to Buchanan, within eight years from the time of commencement aforesaid; and shall complete the enlargement of the capacity of the Richmond dock and tidewater connection, as well as the enlargement of the capacity of the canal from Richmond to Buchanan, by deepening the canal, as hereinabove provided, within ten years from the said time of commencement.

"13. The said company shall not have the power, by mortgage, deed of trust or other contract, to create a lien upon its works and property, except that hereinafter created in favor of the Commonwealth of Virginia, and shall not be competent to sell the same without the assent of the General Assembly of Virginia.

"14. The said company shall, in consideration of the transfer aforesaid by the State of Virginia of all her rights as a stockholder in the James River and Kanawha Company, pay into the treasury of the State, semi-annually forever, the sum of sixty-seven thousand five hundred dollars: and as a guarantee for the faithful compliance with the stipulation of this agreement, they shall deposit with the treasurer of Virginia the sum of one million of dollars in the six per centum registered stock of the Commonwealth of Virginia, to be held by him upon the following terms and conditions; that is to say: the interest upon the said stock, while on deposit, shall be paid to the said company. When the canal shall have been completed to the town of Covington, and the Kanawha improvement completed from Loup Creek shoals to the mouth of the river, if within the time prescribed, one-half of the said sum shall be returned to the said company: and when the entire line shall have been completed in the manner before mentioned, to the Ohio River, if within the prescribed time, the other half shall be returned to the said company; provided the annuity to the State of Virginia, and the five per centum interest to the private stockholders, hereinbefore provided for, shall have been punctually paid; and if the same shall not have been punctually paid, then so much of the said sum of one million of dollars as may be necessary shall be appropriated to the payment of the same, and the residue returned to the said M. de Bellot des Menieres and his associates, or to the Virginia Canal Company, as may be proper; but if the said company shall fail to complete the construction of the line to Covington, and the repairs of the line from Richmond to Buchanan, within three years from the time of the commencement herein prescribed, or shall fail to complete the Kanawha improvement from Loup Creek shoals to the mouth of the river within four years from the time of commencement herein prescribed, or shall fail to complete the entire line from Richmond to the mouth of Kanawha River, in all respects, except the enlargement of the capacity of the canal from Richmond to Buchanan, within eight years from the commencement herein prescribed, or shall fail to complete the enlargement of the Richmond dock and tidewater connection, as well as the deepening of the canal to Buchanan, within ten years from the time of commencement herein prescribed, the said sum of one million of dollars shall be retained and paid to the Commonwealth of Virginia as stipulated damages in money for such failure; and all the work which may have been done in repair and construction, as well as all the rights which the said Virginia Canal Company shall have acquired in the property and franchises of the James River and Kanawha Company, shall be forfeited and revert to the latter company as at present organized; which company shall be thereupon reinstated in all its rights as if this arrangement had never been made, and shall have full right and authority to re-enter upon and resume the control of the whole line of improvement; and for that purpose the present organization of the James River and Kanawha Company shall be continued: provided, however, that if the said Virginia Canal Company shall be unable to complete the said water line improvement from Richmond to the Ohio River within eight years as aforesaid, or to complete the enlargement of the Richmond dock and Tidewater connection, and deepening of the canal from Richmond to Buchanan, within ten years as aforesaid, they may have two years' extension of time in each case, by paying into the treasury of the Commonwealth of Virginia, for the said Commonwealth, before the expiration of the said period of eight years, a half million of dollars, if they require the extension of time for the completion of the water line as well as for the said enlargement; or by so paying one hundred thousand dollars before the expiration of ten years, if they require the extension of time only as to the enlargement aforesaid; which said sums are agreed upon as liquidated damages to be paid to the said Commonwealth in the contingencies aforesaid, for the loss sustained by such a delay or delays in the completion of the said works as herein required: provided, however, that if the said Virginia Canal Company shall have proceeded in good faith to execute the said works, then the General Assembly may suspend the said forfeiture, and allow to the said company such further time as to it may seem just and proper, to complete the said works.

"15. The said Bellot des Minieres, Brothers and Company shall pay to the Commonwealth of Virginia so much of the three hundred thousand dollars of State bonds appropriated by the act of the General Assembly of Virginia, passed March twenty-third, eighteen hundred and sixty, for the improvement of the Kanawha River, as shall have been issued and sold, and expended bona fide on the improvement, when they shall become entitled to the property and revenues of the James River and Kanawha Company; and upon a payment thereof, the said Commonwealth shall release the mortgages given by the said James River and Kanawha Company on the said Kanawha improvement to secure the payment of the said bonds.

"16. As soon as the said M. de Bellot des Minieres and his associates shall have been regularly incorporated according to the laws of France and Virginia, and satisfactory authentication of that fact communicated to the president of the James River and Kanawha Company and the Board of Public Works, and shall have deposited with the treasurer of Virginia one million of dollars in the six per centum registered stock of the Commonwealth, and shall have deposited in one or more of the banks of the city of Richmond, to the credit of the president and directors of the James River and Kanawha Company, for the purpose of paying the floating debt of the company, the sum of four hundred thousand dollars, to be applied to the payment of the said floating debt as far as necessary, and the balance, if any, to be returned to them; and shall also pay into the treasury of Virginia the amount agreed to be paid by them under the next preceding section—then the James River and Kanawha Company shall, by proper deeds, convey its entire property of every kind to the said Virginia Canal Company subject to the charges before mentioned in favor of the present private stockholders and the Commonwealth of Virginia, and subject to any present subsisting contracts for the use of the water of the canal, and subject to all the provisions of this agreement. And until this conveyance shall be made, the James River and Kanawha Company shall manage said property, effects and revenues under the existing laws, the said M. de Bellot des Minieres and his associates furnishing all the means and money that may be necessary to carry on the business of the company, complete Bosher's dam, the Joshua Falls dam, the dam at Lynchburg, and the North River improvements, and keeping the canal in proper repair—they receiving credit for all the revenues of the company. But the president and directors of the present company shall have no power or authority to charge the property of the company with any debt, except for the purpose of keeping the line in proper repair and working condition, and completing the dams at North River improvement as hereinbefore mentioned.

"17. The said Virginia Canal Company may at any time discharge itself from the annuity to the State of Virginia by the payment into the treasury of Virginia of the sum of two million two hundred and fifty thousand dollars in specie; but until the same shall be paid, the annuity of one hundred and thirty-five thousand dollars to the Commonwealth shall be forever a charge upon the whole property of the company, and the Legislature may provide by law in what manner the payment of the said annuity shall be enforced.

"18. The European parties and stockholders may, as between themselves, determine what their relative rights and obligations shall be.

"19. The stockholders in the Virginia Canal Company shall be required by their charter to hold at least one general meeting every year in the city of Richmond.

thereof, the said agreement shall be binding upon all the parties thereto, without any further action on the part of the stockholders or directors of the James River and Kanawha Company; and the said James River and Kanawha Company binds itself to use its best efforts to obtain, at the earliest day possible, the approval of this agreement and of the charter as provided for, by the General Assembly; and, in the meantime, the said agreement shall be obligatory upon the said James River and Kanawha Company, to the full extent of the said company has the legal authority to act without the approval of the General Assembly.

"And to prevent delay in the commencement of the works hereinbefore contracted to be executed, the said parties of the first part shall be authorized to proceed forthwith in their said undertakings; and if the General Assembly shall fail to approve the said agreement, and to grant said charter, then the James River and Kanawha Company binds itself to issue bonds, under the act of the twenty-third day of March, eighteen hundred and sixty, to the parties of the first part, for an amount equal to the principal sum, which may have been expended upon its works as contemplated in this agreement, and the interest thereon from the time when the same shall have been expended until the repayment in bonds as aforesaid; and the said James River and Kanawha Company shall thereupon be restored to all the rights conferred by its charter, as if this contract had not been made, and the said contract shall thereafter be null and void.

"In testimony whereof, the said Ernest de Bellot des Minieres, acting for himself and the firm of Bellot des Minieres, Bróthers and Company, hath hereto subscribed his name and annexed his seal, and the said Thomas H. Ellis, president of the James River and Kanawha Company, acting under authority as aforesaid, hath subscribed his name and caused the seal of the company to be affixed, the day and year first above written, at Richmond, Virginia.

E. DE BELLOT DES MINIERES. (Seal)
THOMAS H. ELLIS, Pres. J. R. & K. Co."

(Corporate Seal)

And whereas the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Virginia approve the objects and views of the contracting parties, and are disposed to give to their contract validity and effect, except so far as it may be modified by this act: Therefore,

COMPANY INCORPORATED: GENERAL POWERS; RESTRICTIONS THEREON.

1. Be it enacted, That when the Board of Public Works shall be satisfied that the minimum capital of twenty millions of dollars has been raised as provided for in the next chapter, then, in compliance with the first article of said agreement, the persons constituting the firm and style of Bellot des Minieres, Brothers and Company, and such persons as they may admit into association with them, together with the corporate and individual stock-

3. The said company shall not subscribe to the stock of any other company, unless it be specially allowed by law; but this prohibition shall not prevent it from receiving stocks or other property in satisfaction of any judgment, order or decree, or as collateral security for or in payment of any debt, or from purchasing stock or other property at any sale made for its benefit. If it so receive shares of its own stock, it may either extinguish the same, or sell and transfer such shares to a purchaser. While, however, it holds such shares of its own stock, no vote shall be given thereon.

4. The said company shall not have the power by mortgage, deed of trust or other contract, to create a lien upon its works and property, except that hereinafter created in favor of the Commonwealth of Virginia, and shall not be competent to sell the same without the assent of the General Assembly of Virginia.

5. The Kanawha River shall remain subject to all the existing laws in relation thereto, and unaffected by this act, until the completion of the work now under contract and in progress upon said river: provided, such work shall be completed before the first day of January, eighteen hundred and sixty-eight, but when the said Virginia Canal Company shall be fully organized and vested with the control of the residue of the line other than the Kanawha River, the term of office of the present members of the Kanawha board shall expire, and members of said board shall be appointed, two by the Virginia Canal Company, and three by the Board of Public Works, whose term of office shall be the same as now prescribed by law, all of whom shall be citizens of the State, and residents of the Kanawha valley; and the present members of the Kanawha board may be reappointed as members of the new board, and such new Kanawha board shall have control of the Kanawha River until the payment by the Virginia Canal Company of the money hereinafter provided to be paid on account of the Kanawha River. Immediately after the completion of the work now in progress on the Kanawha River, or on the first day of January, eighteen hundred and sixty-eight, if such work shall not be completed before that time, the said Virginia Canal Company shall pay to the Commonwealth of Virginia so much of the appropriation of March twenty-third, eighteen hundred and sixty, for the improvement of the Kanawha river, as may have been bona fide expended in the construction of said improvement; and upon payment of said amount the said Virginia Canal Company, by the operation of this act and the conveyance hereinafter authorized, shall be invested with all the rights, powers, franchises and privileges of the James River and Kanawha Company, in and to said Kanawha River; and upon such payment, the said Commonwealth shall release the mortgage given by the James River and Kanawha Company on the said Kanawha improvement, to secure the payment of the said bonds. Such release shall be executed by the Board of Public Works as soon as satisfactory evidence is submitted to them of the payment aforesaid.

TRANSFER OF WORKS BY JAMES RIVER AND KANAWHA COMPANY; PRECEDENT CONDITIONS.

6. When the board of public works shall be satisfied that the minimum capital, as provided in the next chapter, has been raised as therein required, and the said M. de Bellot des Minieres and his associates shall have deposited with the treasurer of the State of Virginia, in the manner prescribed by law, one million of dollars in the six per centum registered stock of the Commonwealth, and shall have deposited in one or more of the banks of the City of Richmond, to the credit of the president and directors of the James River and Kanawha Company, for the purpose of paying the floating debt of that company, the sum of four hundred thousand dollars, to be applied to the payment of the said floating debt as far as necessary, and the balance, if any, to be returned to the said M. de Bellot des Minieres and his associates, and satisfactory evidence of the performance of said conditions shall have been furnished the board of public works, then the said James River and Kanawha Company shall, by proper deeds, convey its entire property, privileges and franchises of every kind to the said Virginia Canal Company, subject to the provisions and requirements of the fifth section of this chapter, and to the conditions hereafter required in this act, and also to any present subsisting contracts for the use of the water of the canal, or for any other purpose.

SUITS DEPENDING; HOW PROCEEDED WITH.

7. All causes and matters which shall be depending and undetermined in any court in this Commonwealth, in which the James River and Kanawha Company are or may be parties, plaintiff or defendant, on the day when the said transfer is made, shall be proceeded in, tried and determined as if the same had been commenced by or against the said Virginia Canal Company.

TRANSFER OF RIGHTS OF STATE OF VIRGINIA, AND RELEASE OF ITS SECURITIES; CONDITIONS.

8. When the board of public works shall be satisfied that the conditions prescribed in the sixth section have been fully complied with, and that the minimum capital, as provided for in the next chapter, shall have been raised as therein required, they shall transfer in like manner to the said Virginia Canal Company all the rights which the State of Virginia has as a stockholder in the James River and Kanawha Company; and shall furthermore release all mortgages, deeds of trust or other contracts, except the mortgage relative to the Kanawha River, by which any lien has been created to the Commonwealth upon the works and property of the said James River and Kanawha Company, subject only to the incumbrances, limitations and restrictions by this act imposed.

9. The company hereby incorporated thenceforward shall be entitled to all tolls, rents and other emoluments, rights, franchises, privileges and immunities which are now enjoyed by the said James River and Kanawha Company, subject to the provisions and limitations of the fifth section of this chapter; and the president and directors of the new company, their officers and agents, shall take possession of the property and works transferred as aforesaid, for the benefit of the Virginia Canal Company.

10. The said Virginia Canal Company shall, in consideration of the transfer aforesaid, by the State of Virginia, pay into the treasury of the State, in the mode prescribed by law, semi-annually forever, the sum of sixty-seven thousand five hundred dollars. But the said company may at any time discharge itself from the said annuity by the payment into the said treasury of the sum of two millions two hundred and fifty thousand dollars in specie; but until the same shall be paid, the said annuity shall be forever a charge upon the whole property and franchises of the company; and the legislature may provide by law in what manner the payment of the said annuity shall be enforced.

11. The Virginia Canal Company shall furthermore take the said property so to be transferred to them, subject to the payment, to the corporate and individual stockholders mentioned in the second chapter, of five per centum per annum on the amounts of the certificates of stock held by each respectively, to be computed from the date of the organization of the said Virginia Canal Company, until the water line hereinafter mentioned shall be completed to the Ohio River, as herein prescribed; and thereafter, in lieu of the five per centum, shall pay to the said stockholders their ratable share of the profits of the company; and for failure to perform this provision, the company may be proceeded against as provided hereafter in the seventh chapter.

DEFENDANT'S EXHIBIT No. 7, 1863, C.

Acts of Assembly of Virginia, 1865-66.

The following is found on page 458 of said acts, pertaining to the Virginia Canal Company, etc.:

No. 19. Joint resolution in relation to an act entitled an act to amend and re-enact the act entitled an act to incorporate the Virginia Canal Company, etc., passed February 3, 1866.

Adopted February 9, 1866.

Whereas, this General Assembly at its present session, hath passed an act to amend and re-enact the act entitled an act to incorporate the Virginia Canal Company, and to transfer the rights and franchises of the James River and Kanawha Company thereto, passed March twenty-ninth, eighteen hundred and sixty-one, whereby it is provided that certain amounts shall be paid into the treasury of Virginia, in consideration of the transfer of the State's interest in the James River and Kanawha Company, and as a security for the faithful performance of the provisions of the said act; therefore,

1. DEFENDANT'S EXHIBIT No. 7, 1863, D.

JAMES RIVER AND KANAWHA COMPANY.

Chap. 139.—AN ACT to authorize the James River and Kanawha Company to make sale and transfer of all its works, property and franchises to the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company, and to define the powers and duties of the Board of Public Works in respect thereto.

Approved February 27, 1879.

Whereas, in the act incorporating the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company the Legislature authorized said company to purchase any of the property and franchises of any work of internal improvement within the limits of its charter, and the said company has made certain propositions to the James River and Kanawha Company, looking to the purchase of its property and franchises; therefore,

1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Virginia, That the James River and Kanawha Company is hereby authorized to sell and convey all its works, property and franchises to the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company, and that the proxies of the State of Virginia representing its stock in the James River and Kanawha Company are hereby authorized to vote for such sale and conveyance; provided, that the contract of sale and the conveyance aforesaid shall contain the following provisions and conditions, and shall not contain any conditions or provisions inconsistent therewith; provided, that before any contract shall be assented to by the State proxies, it shall be submitted to the Attorney-General of the State for his advice as to whether the terms of this act have been complied with:

subject, however, to the interruptions and abandonment contemplated by the ninth clause of this first section, and the construction and equipment of the railroad hereinafter described, which shall be a first-class railroad, with steel rails, the same gauge of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railway, and equipped with ample accommodation for all passenger travel and freight transportation, within the time hereinafter limited, and the performance of the duties prescribed by the sixth clause of this first section; and also the assumption and payment of all the debts and obligations of the said James River and Kanawha Company, which could be asserted against the James River and Kanawha Company, without meaning thereby to acknowledge or give in any manner any validity to any such debt or obligation, which it would not have if the same were asserted against the James River and Kanawha Company, and reserving to the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company the right to make any and all defenses in law or in fact, which the said James River and Kanawha Company would have the right to make if this contract had never been executed. A schedule of such debts and obligations, including the bond or bonds which may have been given, or which are to be given to the State of Virginia for the maintenance, clothing and guarding of the convicts, which shall be a preferred debt, shall be made part of the contract, and such bonds to the State of Virginia for the maintenance of convicts shall be a lien on all the property, rights and franchises transferred by the James River and Kanawha Company to the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company, subordinate only to the mortgages now existing on the same, and shall be the first and preferred lien upon all other property, rights and franchises of the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company now owned, or that may be hereafter acquired by it. The lien on the property, rights and franchises transferred, shall be reserved in the conveyance to be made, and a mortgage shall be executed by the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company on its property, rights and franchises existing, or to be acquired by it, to secure such debt to the State.

Second. A sum of money to be agreed upon, not less than thirty thousand dollars, nor more than fifty thousand dollars, shall be paid in cash by the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company to the James River and Kanawha Company, and said sum shall be expended and paid out by the president and directors of the James River and Kanawha Company in payment of salaries and wages due officers and employes up to the time of the transfer, which may be made as hereinafter provided, and in the payment of such debts, charges, costs and expenses as may have been incurred in the administration of the company since the first day of May, eighteen hundred and sixty-seven; and should such sum be insufficient to pay all of such claims, the said president and board of directors shall have full discretion and liberty in paying such as they may select. But if there should be a surplus remaining of said sum after discharging the claims hereinbefore described, such surplus shall be paid to the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company. But the bonds which may have been given, or which are to be given, to the State of Virginia for the maintenance, clothing and guarding of convicts, and which said bonds are, by the terms of the contract with the State, to be payable five years after their date, shall not be included in the charges and expenses of administration payable under this clause, though fully included in the debts and obligations assumed by the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company.

Third. The Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company being willing to make this contemplated purchase only on the condition that it can negotiate an equitable settlement with the creditors of the said James River and Kanawha Company, other than those specially paid under the second clause of this section, said company reserves the right, on failure in such negotiation, to give notice in writing to the president of the James River and Kanawha Company, or to its secretary, or to any officer found in charge of its principal office in Richmond, within sixty days from the passage of this act, of the failure of such negotiation, and of the consequent annulment of this contract. But if said notice is not given within said sixty days, the right to give the same shall cease, unless the time be extended by the board of directors of the James River and Kanawha Company, but such extension shall not exceed sixty days. But the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company shall never claim or demand from the State of Virginia, on account of the payment, purchase or compromise of the outstanding bonds of the James River and Kanawha Company, which were guaranteed, and afterwards assumed by the State of Virginia, a larger sum than that which said Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company may expend in payment, purchase or compromise of said bonds. But the State shall not be liable for any bonds that the Supreme Court of Appeals have decided or may decide the State is not liable for.

Fourth. The Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company shall deposit with the Board of Public Works the sum of five hundred thousand dollars, in market value, in United States bonds, or that amount, in market value, in other public securities, to be approved by said board, as a pledge for the completion of its railroad from Richmond up the valley of the James River, on the north side of said river from the city of Richmond to a point at or near the Joshua dam, on or near the present location of the tow-path, to Clifton Forge, with a branch of like gauge to Lexington from the mouth of North River, within twenty months from the date of such sale and conveyance. When the said board shall be satisfied that twenty-five miles of said railroad are fully completed, it shall surrender to said company fifty thousand dollars in value of said bonds; and for each successive section of twenty-five miles, which may be completed, an additional amount of fifty thousand dollars in value shall be surrendered; and on the completion of the whole work, the whole of the bonds remaining with said board shall be surrendered. But on failure of the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company to complete said railroad within the time prescribed as aforesaid, the said bonds, so to be deposited by it as security, shall be forfeited, and the same, or so many thereof as may remain with the Board of Public Works at the time of such forfeiture, shall be forfeited and delivered by said board to the Commonwealth of Virginia. But if from any unforeseen casualties it should be found impracticable to complete the line within the time prescribed, the Board of Public Works shall have power to extend the time for a period not exceeding six months. The first one hundred and six miles of said railroad shall be constructed in ten months from the date of said contract and conveyance, and of said one hundred and six miles, fifty miles shall be below Lynchburg, and fifty-six miles above Lynchburg, and any railroad constructed between Buchanan and Clifton Forge shall be counted part of said fifty-six miles above Lynchburg. The surrender of bonds above provided for shall, so far as said one hundred and six miles are concerned, be limited so that no withdrawal for more than fifty miles shall be made of construction above Lynchburg, until at least fifty miles below Lynchburg are constructed. If the canal from Columbia, in Fluvanna County, to the first locks above Stillman's mills, on the Rivanna River, shall be discontinued at any time, said railroad company shall, within ninety days after said discontinuance, build a branch of their road along the line of said Rivanna River from Columbia to the locks aforesaid.

Fifth. After a final and absolute contract of sale shall have been concluded between the James River and Kanawha Company, and the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company, and within ten days after the James River and Kanawha Company shall have in writing notified the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company of its readiness to convey all its property and franchises in pursuance of such contract, the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company shall make the cash payment and deposit hereinbefore required on tender of such conveyance; and if such cash payment and deposit shall not then be made, the contract of purchase shall be and become absolutely null and void. But the said contract must be made within one hundred and twenty days after the passage of this act.

Sixth. It is hereby provided that the rate of dockage at Richmond shall not exceed the rate at present established by the James River and Kanawha Company, and all existing contracts for water privileges along the entire line shall be respected and maintained at rates not exceeding the present rates, except in those cases in which they may be cancelled or altered by agreement, or extinguished by condemnation. It shall be the duty of the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company to maintain the present water supply of the docks, and of the canal, along its line, between Bosher's dam and tidewater, and along the Lynchburg level between the water works' dam (which shall be preserved) above Lynchburg, and the first lock below Lynchburg, and in the construction of its railroad it shall not so destroy or obstruct the present canal between Bosher's dam and tidewater, or between the water works' dam above Lynchburg and the first lock below Lynchburg, as to lessen the present water supply.

Seventh. The maintenance of the canal by the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company, so far as required by the first and ninth clauses of this first section, and the construction and equipment by said company of the railroad hereinbefore described, within the time herein limited, and the performance by said company of the duties prescribed by the sixth clause of this first section, shall be a sufficient compliance with all the conditions on which the franchises of the James River and Kanawha Company were heretofore granted to it by the State of Virginia: provided that nothing contained in this act shall release the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company from the obligation imposed on the James River and Kanawha Company by its charter to maintain farm bridges over any portion of the canal not filled up, and to keep open necessary ditches near the same; and when the canal is filled up, to permit the privilege of crossing where bridges formerly stood. A failure to build said railroad within two years from the date of the expiration of the time above prescribed for the completion of its works, shall work a forfeiture of said works, property and franchises, and also of the works, property and franchises of said railroad company to said James River and Kanawha Company; provided, however, that such forfeiture shall not prejudice the rights of any creditor of said railroad company, and upon such forfeiture, said James River and Kanawha Company shall thereupon be revived and restored as a corporation, with all of its rights, privileges and franchises, just as they existed at the date of the passage of this act. And the Board of Public Works are hereby authorized and required, whenever in their opinion such forfeiture shall have occurred, to take the proper steps in the Circuit Court of the City of Richmond, by such proceedings as to them shall seem best, to have said forfeiture established and declared, and the said Board of Public Works shall, upon the adjudication of such forfeiture, take possession of said works, property and franchises, and hold the same until the James River and Kanawha Company shall be reorganized, and thereupon turn the same over to said company, and the said Board of Public Works shall, without delay, cause said company to be reorganized in conformity with laws now in force in regard thereto. But nothing herein contained shall be construed as releasing the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company from any obligations now resting on the James keep the same in repair where the said canal crosses the streets of any River and Kanawha Company to erect bridges or make earth fillings, and city, if such obligation exists; provided, the city of Richmond shall not make any bridge or filling which shall obstruct or injure the power or right of said Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company to furnish the water power of said canal to parties desiring to use the same, as required by the provisions of this act.

Eighth. The said railroad company may, in approaching and passing through Lynchburg, arrange for the temporary use of any tracks already constructed for a period not exceeding three years.

Ninth. The substitution of a railroad for the canal, as a line of commerce, shall be so managed as not to interrupt the business of the canal during the progress of railroad construction on such parts of the canal as are not necessarily occupied by the railroad company at the time of construction.

Tenth. All the property acquired or constructed by the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company, under this act or otherwise, shall be subject to taxation in the State of Virginia to the same extent and in like manner as that of other railroads or canals which are subject to taxation, notwithstanding any provision to the contrary in the charter of the James River and Kanawha Company, or in the charter of any other company to whose rights, privileges, or franchises the James River and Kanawha Company has succeeded.

Eleventh. In any mortgage or deed of trust, which may hereafter be executed by said Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company on its works and property, at least one of the trustees shall at all times be a resident of the State of Virginia.

Twelfth. The Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company shall have no rights hereunder to build any dams in James River not already located; nor shall it have any right, after the completion of its railroad, to charge tolls upon the navigation of any part of said river, but may charge rents for the use of water derived from its works, as is now provided by law.

Thirteenth. The Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company shall not charge for tolls on boats, passengers and freights upon the canal, so long as the same or any part thereof shall be operated by said railroad company, higher rates than the maximum rates charged by the James River and Kanawha Company since the fifteenth day of May, eighteen hundred and seventy-seven.

Fourteenth. When the railroad shall have been substituted for the canal as a line of commerce, as contemplated by this act, the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company shall pay to the owners of all boats then engaged in or fit for regular business operations on said canal, the fair cash value of such boats at that time; said value to be ascertained by commissioners, to be appointed on the motion of any boat owner, after ten days' notice to said Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company, or on the motion of the said Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company, by the Circuit Court of the city of Richmond, for the purpose of assessing and fixing such value. And upon the confirmation by said court of the report of said commissioners, the said railroad company shall pay into said court the aggregate amount of the values so ascertained; provided, the aggregate amount so required to be paid by said railroad company shall not exceed twenty-five thousand dollars. And in the distribution of said aggregate sum, if it be not sufficient to pay all the amounts so ascertained, the said court shall give a preference to the owners of such of said boats as shall have been engaged in or fit for regular business operations on said canal at the time of the execution of the contract herein contemplated; and the residue, if any, shall be by said court distributed to the owners of such of said boats as shall have been put in operation upon the canal subsequent to the execution of said contract, the distribution in each class to be pro rata. And upon the acceptance of said ascertained value, or of said distributive share, in every case the owners of the boat or boats thus, in whole or in part, compensated for, shall deliver the same to said railroad company, and thereupon the right of property in such boat or boats shall vest in said railroad company; but in every case in which said ascertained value, or said distributive share, shall not be accepted by boat owner, the said court shall refund to said Richmond and Alleghany

Railroad Company a corresponding sum of money out of the aggregate amount so to be paid into court as aforesaid.

Fifteenth. The said Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company shall furnish to the people on the south side of the James River, for the transportation of persons and produce across James River to the line of their railroad, facilities the same, or at least equal to, those now afforded by the James River and Kanawha Company.

Sixteenth. The Richmond and Alleghany Company shall, within two years from the passage of this act, be required to provide all dams across James River from Richmond to the terminus of the line of the James River and Kanawha Canal with suitable sluices, slopes, or fish-ladders, so that fish may have free passage up or down said river during the month of March, April, May and June of each year, unless the water during said months be so low as not to run over such dams. Said sluices, slopes or fish-ladders shall be kept in good repair, and be restored in case of destruction, and be of such plan and construction as shall be approved by the fish commissioner of the State. Upon the completion, within the time specified of the said sluices, slopes or fish-ladders, the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company shall be released from any and all liabilities imposed by law upon the James River and Kanawha Company for failure to construct the same. With the approbation of said fish commissioner, the time herein specified may be extended to not exceeding twelve months.

2. Before the execution of the contract herein contemplated between the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company and the James River and Kanawha Company there shall be a satisfactory agreement and contract made between the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company and the Buchanan and Clifton Forge Railway Company, and said agreement and contract shall be made within one hundred and twenty days after the passage of this act.

3. Said Board of Public Works is further invested with full authority to institute all suits which may be necessary for the enforcement of said contract, and to defend all suits which may be brought against the said board in respect thereto.

4. The Circuit Court of the city of Richmond shall have exclusive jurisdiction of all suits in respect to said contract, whether brought by the Board of Public Works or by others, and the Board of Public Works shall be a necessary party to all such suits.

5. Upon the final conveyance of the property of the James River and Kanawha Company to the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company, herein contemplated, the contract between the State and the James River and Kanawha Company for the use of convict labor shall cease and determine, and the convicts then in the employ of the said company shall be returned to and delivered to the superintendent of the penitentiary.

6. The said Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company shall be subject to the exercise of the police power of the city of Richmond, notwithstanding any rights claimed under the charter of the James River and Kanawha Company, as though it were a corporation now for the first time chartered.

7. The said Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company shall, as fast as they abandon the said canal, so drain the same as not to leave stagnant water, by which the health of the citizens along the line of said canal might be injuriously affected.

8. The General Assembly shall at all times have the right to so regulate the charges for local and way travel and freight over the route of said Richmond and Alleghany Railroad, as to prevent unjust discrimination against such local and way travel and freight.

9. This act shall be in force from its passage.

JAMES RIVER AND KANAWHA COMPANY.

Chap. 128.—AN ACT to authorize the James River and Kanawha Company to make sale and transfer of all its works, property and franchises, and to invest the purchaser or purchasers with certain corporate rights, powers and franchises.

Approved April 2, 1879.

Whereas the General Assembly of Virginia has passed an act approved the twenty-seventh day of February, eighteen hundred and seventy-nine, entitled an act to authorize the James River and Kanawha Company to make sale and transfer of all its works, property and franchises to the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company, and to define the powers and duties of the Board of Public Works in respect thereto; and whereas it is desired to provide for the contingency, that the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company may not make the purchase of the works, property and franchises of the James River and Kanawha Company as contemplated in said act; now, therefore,

1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly, That in the event that the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company shall not purchase the works, property and franchises of the James River and Kanawha Company within the term prescribed by said act, then the James River and Kanawha Company is hereby authorized to sell and convey all of its works, property and franchises to any other corporation, person or persons, and the proxies of the State of Virginia, representing its stock in the James River and Kanawha Company, are hereby authorized to vote for such sale and conveyance: provided, that the contract of sale and conveyance shall contain all the provisions and conditions set forth and prescribed in the act aforesaid, approved the twenty-seventh day of February, eighteen hundred and seventy-nine, and shall not contain any provisions or conditions inconsistent therewith, except that any contract made under the provisions of this act by and with the James River and Kanawha Company, or by and with the Buchanan and Clifton Forge Railway Company, may be made at any time after the failure of negotiations with the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company under the said act, approved February twenty-seventh, eighteen hundred and seventy-nine.

2. Any sale and conveyance made in pursuance of the provisions of this act shall pass to the purchaser all the works, property and franchises of the James River and Kanawha Company as they exist at the time of the sale, except so far as the same may be inconsistent with the contract of sale, and the purchaser shall henceforth be a corporation by any name which may be set forth in said conveyance, or in any writing signed by said purchaser and recorded in the court in which the conveyance shall be recorded. And the corporation thus created shall be liable to perform all the duties and obligations of the James River and Kanawha Company, except so far as the same may be inconsistent with the contract of sale. The interest of the purchaser in the corporation shall be personal estate, and he or his assigns may create so many shares of stock therein as he or they may think proper, not exceeding together the amount of stock held in the James River and Kanawha Company at the time of sale, and assign the same in a book to be kept for that purpose. The said shares shall thenceforth be on the footing of shares in joint stock companies generally, except only that the first meeting of the stockholders shall be held on such day and at such place as shall be fixed by the said purchaser, of which notice shall be published for two weeks in a newspaper published in the city of Richmond.

3. In addition to such rights, powers, privileges and franchises as are indicated by the preceding sections, the said purchaser shall be invested with all the corporate powers and franchises necessary for constructing, equipping, maintaining and operating the railroad contemplated in the act aforesaid, approved the twenty-seventh day of Ferbuary, eighteen hundred and seventy-nine, and by contract with the Buchanan and Clifton Forge Railway Company to acquire its rights, property and franchises.

4. It shall be lawful for the corporation thus created to borrow money to aid in the construction and equipment of its railroad, and for that purpose to mortgage its works, property and franchises.

5. This act shall be in force from its passage.

JAMES RIVER AND KANAWHA COMPANY.

Chap. 181.—AN ACT authorizing the Board of Public Works to adjust the claims of the James River and Kanawha Company, and appropriating the proceeds, and providing for the safe-keeping of certain deposits, and authorizing the said James River and Kanawha Company to sell and convey its works and franchises to the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company.

Approved March 4, 1880.

1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly, That the Board of Public Works shall be authorized to adjust the claims of Virginia against the James River and Kanawha Company for the hire of convicts upon such terms as shall seem to them just and to the interest of the State: provided, however, that whatever sum of money shall be realized to the State for said settlement shall be paid into the treasury of the State for the use of the penitentiary.

2. The Board of Public Works shall have authority to select a depository for the safekeeping of five hundred thousand dollars of bonds, to be deposited by the purchaser of the works, property and franchises of the James River and Kanawha Company, and shall require the purchaser to pay the charges for such safekeeping.

3. That it shall be lawful for the James River and Kanawha Company to sell and convey, and for the proxies representing the State of Virginia in any stockholders' meeting of said company to vote for the sale and conveyance of its works, property and franchises to the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company, upon terms and conditions of an act approved February twenty-seventh, eighteenth hundred and seventy-nine, entitled an act, and so forth, notwithstanding the limitations of said act; provided, the said sale and conveyance shall be made within five days from the passage of this act.

4. This act shall be in force from its passage.

DEFENDANT'S EXHIBIT No. 7—1863—G.

This deed, made this fourth day of March, A. D. 1880, by and between the James River and Kanawha Company, a corporation under the laws of the State of Virginia, party of the first part, and the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company, also a corporation of the State of Virginia, party of the second part:

Whereas, the General Assembly of the State of Virginia heretofore passed an act approved February 27, 1879, entitled "An act to authorize the James River and Kanawha Company to make sale and transfer of all its works, property and franchises to the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company, and to define the powers and duties of the Board of Public Works in respect thereto," which act is in the words and figures following, to-wit:

"Whereas, in the act incorporating the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company the Legislature authorized said company to purchase any of the property and franchises of any work of internal improvement within the limits of its charter, and the said company has made certain propositions to the James River and Kanawha Company looking to the purchase of its property and franchises; therefore, senting its stock in the James River and Kanawha Company, are hereby authorized to vote for such sale and conveyance; provided, that the contract of sale and the conveyance aforesaid shall contain the following provisions and conditions, and shall not contain any conditions or provisions inconsistent therewith; provided, that before any contract shall be assented to by the State proxies, it shall be submitted to the Attorney-General of the State for his advice as to whether the terms of this act shall have been complied with.

First. The consideration to be paid and rendered by the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company and the conditions of the sale and conveyance shall be the maintenance of the canal as a line of commerce, subject, however, to the interruptions and abandonment contemplated by the ninth clause of the first section; and the construction and equipment of the railroad hereinafter described, which shall be a first-class railroad, with steel rails, the same gauge of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railway, and equipped with ample accommodations for all passenger travel and freight transportation, within the time hereinafter limited, and the performance of the duties prescribed by the sixth clause of this first section; and also the assumption and payment of all the debts and obligations of the said James River and Kanawha Company, which could be asserted against the James River and Kanawha Company, without meaning thereby to acknowledge or give in any manner any validity to any such debt or obligation which it would not have if the same were asserted against the James River and Kanawha Company, and reserving to the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company the right to make any and all defenses in law or in fact which the said James River and Kanawha Company would have the right to make if this contract had never been executed, a schedule of such debts and obligations, including the bond or bonds which may have been given or which are to be given to the State of Virginia for the maintenance, clothing and guarding of convicts, which shall be a preferred debt, shall be made part of the contract, and such bonds to the State of Virginia for the maintenance of convicts, shall be a lien on all the property, rights and franchises transferred by the James River and Kanawha Company to the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company, subordinate only to the mortgages now existing on the same, and shall be the first and preferred lien upon all other property, rights and franchises of the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company, now owned or that may be hereafter acquired by it. The lien on the property, rights and franchises transferred shall be reserved in the conveyance to be made, and a mortgage shall be executed by the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company on its property, rights and franchises, existing or to be acquired by it to secure such debt to the State.

Second. A sum of money to be agreed upon, not less than thirty thousand dollars nor more than fifty thousand dollars, shall be paid in cash by the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company to the James River and Kanawha Company, and said sum shall be expended and paid out by the president and directors of the James River and Kanawha Company in payment of salaries and wages due officers and employes up to the time of the transfer, which may be made as hereinafter provided, and in the payment of such debts, charges, costs and expenses as may have been incurred in the administration of the company since the first day of May, eighteen hundred and sixty-seven; and should such sum be insufficient to pay all such claims, the said president and board of directors shall have full discretion and liberty in paying such as they may select. But if there should be a surplus remaining of said sum after discharging the claims hereinbefore described, such surplus shall be paid to the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company, but the bonds which may have been given, or which are to be given to the State of Virginia for the maintenance, clothing and guarding of convicts, and which said bonds are, by the terms of the contract with the State, to be payable five years after their date, shall not be included in the charges and expenses of administration payable under this clause, though fully included in the debts and obligations assumed by the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company.

Third. The Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company being willing to make this contemplated purchase only on the condition that it can negotiate an equitable settlement with the creditors of the said James River and Kanawha Company, other than those specially paid under the second clause of this section, said company reserves the right, on failure in such negotiation, to give notice in writing to the president of the James River and Kanawha Company, or to its secretary, or to any officer found in charge of its principal office in Richmond, within sixty days from the passage of this act, of the failure of such negotiation and of the consequent annulment of this contract; but if said notice is not given within the said sixty days the right to give the same shall cease, unless the time be extended by the board of directors of the James River and Kanawha Company, but such extension shall not exceed sixty days; but the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company shall never claim or demand from the State of Virginia on account of the payment, purchase or compromise of the outstanding bonds of the James River and Kanawha Company which were guaranteed and afterwards assumed by the State of Virginia, a larger sum than that which said Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company may expend in payment, purchase or compromise of said bonds. But the State shall not be liable for any bonds that the Supreme Court of Appeals have decided or may decide the State is not liable for.

Fourth. The Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company shall deposit with the Board of Public Works the sum of five hundred thousand dollars, in market value in United States bonds or that amount in market value in other public securities, to be approved by said board, as a pledge for the completion of its railroad from Richmond, up the valley of the James River, on the north side of said river from the city of Richmond to a point at or near the Joshua dam, on or near the present location of the tow-path to Clifton Forge, with a branch of like gauge to Lexington from the mouth of North River, within twenty months from the date of such sale and conveyance. When the said board shall be satisfied that twenty-five miles of said railroad are fully completed, it shall surrender to said company fifty thousand dollars in value of said bonds; and for each successive section of twenty-five miles which may be completed an additional amount of fifty thousand dollars in value shall be surrendered, and on the completion of the whole work the whole of the bonds remaining with said board shall be surrendered. But on the failure of the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company to complete said railroad within the time prescribed as aforesaid, the said bonds so to be deposited by it as security shall be forfeited, and the same or so many thereof as may remain with the Board of Public Works at the time of such forfeiture, shall be forfeited and delivered by said board to the Commonwealth of Virginia. But if from any unforeseen casualties it should be found impracticable to complete the line within the time prescribed, the Board of Public Works shall have power to extend the time for a period not exceeding six months. The first one hundred and six miles of said railroad shall be constructed in ten months from the date of said contract and conveyance, and of said one hundred and six miles fifty miles shall be below Lynchburg, and fifty-six miles above Lynchburg, and any railroad constructed between Buchanan and Clifton Forge shall be counted part of said fifty-six miles above Lynchburg. The surrender of bonds above provided for shall so far as said one hundred and six miles are concerned, be limited so that no withdrawal for more than fifty miles shall be made for construction above Lynchburg until at least fifty miles below Lynchburg are constructed. If the canal from Columbia in Fluvanna County, to the first locks above Stillman's mills on the Rivanna River, shall be discontinued at any time, said railroad company shall, within ninety days after said discontinuance, build a branch of their road along the line of said Rivanna River from Columbia to the locks aforesaid.

Fifth. After a final and absolute contract of sale shall have been concluded between the James River and Kanawha Company and the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company, and within ten days after the James River and Kanawha Company shall have in writing notified the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company of its readiness to convey all its property and franchises in pursuance of such contract, the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company shall make the cash payment and deposit hereinbefore required on tender of such conveyance; and if such cash payment and deposit shall not then be made, the contract of purchase shall be and become absolutely null and void; but the said contract must be made within one hundred and twenty days after the passage of this act.

Sixth. It is hereby provided that the rate of dockage at Richmond shall not exceed the rate at present established by the James River and Kanawha Company, and all existing contracts for water privileges along the entire line shall be respected and maintained at rates not exceeding the present rates, except in those cases in which they may be cancelled or altered by agreement or extinguished by condemnation. It shall be the duty of the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company to maintain the present water supply of the docks and of the canal along its line between Bosher's dam and tidewater, and along the Lynchburg level between the water works' dam (which shall be preserved) above Lynchburg, and the first lock below Lynchburg, and in the construction of its railroad it shall not so destroy or obstruct the present canal between Bosher's dam and tidewater or between the water works dam above Lynchburg and the first lock below Lynchburg, as to lessen the present water supply.

Seventh. The maintenance of the canal by the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company so far as required by the first and ninth clauses of this first section, and the construction and equipment by said company of the railroad hereinbefore described, within the time herein limited, and the performance by said company of the duties prescribed by the sixth clause of this first section, shall be a sufficient compliance with all the conditions on which the franchises of the James River and Kanawha Company were heretofore granted to it by the State of Virginia, provided that nothing contained in this act shall release the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company from the obligation imposed on the James River and Kanawha Company by its charter to maintain farm bridges over any portion of the canal not filled up, and to keep open necessary ditches near the same; and where the canal is filled up to permit the privilege of crossing where bridges formerly stood. A failure to build said railroad within two years from the date of the expiration of the time above prescribed for the completion of its works, shall work a forfeiture of said works, property and franchises, and also of the works, property and franchises of said railroad company to said James River and Kanawha Company; provided, however, that such forfeiture shall not prejudice the rights of any creditor of said railroad company, and upon such forfeiture said James River and Kanawha Company shall thereupon be revived and restored as a corporation, with all of its rights, privileges and franchises, just as they existed at the date of the passage of this act.

And the Board of Public Works are hereby authorized and required, whenever in their opinion such forfeiture shall have occurred, to take the proper steps in the Circuit Court of the City of Richmond, by such proceedings as to them shall seem best, to have said forfeiture established and declared, and the said Board of Public Works shall upon the adjudication of such forfeiture take possession of said works, property and franchises, and hold the same until the James River and Kanawha Company shall be reorganized and thereupon turn the same over to said company and the said Board of Public Works shall without delay, cause said company to be reorganized in conformity with laws now in force in regard thereto.

But nothing herein contained shall be construed as releasing the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company from any obligation now resting on the James River and Kanawha Company to erect bridges or make earth fillings, and keep the same in repair where the said canal crosses the streets of any city, if such obligation exists, provided the city of Richmond shall not make any bridge or filling which shall obstruct or injure the power or right of said Richmond and Alleghany Company to furnish the water power of said canal to parties desiring to use the same as required by the provisions of this act.

Eighth. The said railroad company may, in approaching and passing through Lynchburg, arrange for the temporary use of any tracks already constructed, for a period not exceeding three years.

Ninth. The substitution of a railroad for a canal as a line of commerce, shall be so managed as not to interrupt the business of the canal during the progress of railroad construction on such parts of the canal as are not necessarily occupied by the railroad company at the time of construction.

Tenth. All the property acquired or constructed by the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company, under this act or otherwise, shall be subject to taxation in the State of Virginia, to the same extent and in like manner as that of other railroads or canals which are subject to taxation, notwithstanding any provision to the contrary in the charter of the James River and Kanawha Company, or in the charter of any other company to whose rights, privileges or franchises the James River and Kanawha Company has succeeded.

Eleventh. In any mortgage or deed of trust which may hereafter be executed by said Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company on its works and property, at least one of the trustees shall at all times be a resident of the State of Virginia.

Twelfth. The Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company shall have no rights hereunder to build any dams in James River not already located nor shall it have any right after the completion of its railroad to charge tolls upon the navigation of any part of said river, but may charge rents for the use of water derived from its works, as is now provided by law.

Thirteenth. The Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company shall not charge for tolls on boats, passengers and freights upon the canal, so long as the same or any part thereof shall be operated by said railroad company, higher rates than the maximum rates charged by the James River and Kanawha Company, since the fifteenth day of May, eighteen hundred and seventy-seven.

Fourteenth. When the railroad shall have been substituted for the canal as a line of commerce as contemplated by this act, the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company shall pay to the owners of all boats then enagged in or fit for regular business operations on said canal the fair cash value of such boats at that time, said value to be ascertained by commissioners, to be appointed on the motion of any boat owner after ten days' notice to said Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company, or on the motion of the said Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company, by the Circuit Court of the city of Richmond, for the purpose of assessing and fixing such value; and upon the confirmation by said court of the report of said commissioners the said railroad company shall pay into said court the aggregate amount of the values so ascertained; provided the aggregate amount so required to be paid by said railroad company shall not exceed twenty-five thousand dollars. And in the distribution of said aggregate sum, if it be not sufficient to pay all the amounts so ascertained, the said court shall give a preference to the owners of such of said boats as shall have been engaged in or fit for regular business operations on said canal at the time of the execution of the contract herein contemplated and the residue, if any, shall be by said court distributed to the owners of such of said boats as shall have been put in operation upon the canal subsequent to the execution of said contract, the distribution in each class to be pro rata. And upon the acceptance of said ascertained value or of said distributive share, in every case the owners of the boat or boats, thus in whole or in part compensated for, shall deliver the same to the said railroad company, and thereupon the right of property in such boat, or boats shall vest in said railroad company, but in every case in which said ascertained value or said distributive share shall not be accepted by boat owners, the said court shall refund to said Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company a corresponding sum of money out of the aggregate amount so to be paid into court as aforesaid.

Fifteenth. The said Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company shall furnish to the people on the south side of the James River for the transportation of persons and produce across James River to the line of their railroad facilities, the same or at least equal to those now afforded by the James River and Kanawha Company.

Sixteenth. The Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company shall, within two years from the passage of this act, be required to provide all dams across James River from Richmond to the terminus of the line of the James River and Kanawha Canal with suitable sluices, slopes or fish ladders, so that fish may have free passage up or down said river the water during said months be so low as not to run over such dams. Said sluices, slopes or fish ladders shall be kept in good repair, and be restored in case of destruction, and be of such plan and construction as shall be approved by the fish commissioner of the State. Upon the completion within the time specified, of the said sluices, slopes or fish ladders, the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company shall be released from any and all liabilities imposed by law upon the James River and Kanawha Company for failure to construct the same. With the approbation of said fish commissioner, the time herein specified may be extended to not exceeding twelve months.

2. Before the execution of the contract herein contemplated between the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company and the James River and Kanawha Company, there shall be a satisfactory agreement and contract made between the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company and the Buchanan and Clifton Forge Railway Company and said agreement and contract shall be made within one hundred and twenty days after the passage of this act.

3. The Board of Public Works is further invested with full authority to institute all suits which may be necessary for the enforcement of said contract and to defend all suits which may be brought against the said board in respect thereto.

4. The Circuit Court of the City of Richmond shall have exclusive jurisdiction of all suits in respect to said contract, whether brought by the Board of Public Works or by others, and the Board of Public Works shall be a necessary party to all such suits.

5. Upon the final conveyance of the property of the James River and Kanawha Company to the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company herein contemplated, the contract between the State and the James River and Kanawha Company for the use of convict labor shall cease and determine, and the convicts then in the employ of the said company shall be returned to and delivered to the superintendent of the penitentiary.

6. The said Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company shall be subject to the exercise of the police power of the city of Richmond, notwithstanding any rights claimed under the charter of the James River and Kanawha Company, as though it were a corporation now for the first time chartered.

7. The said Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company shall, as fast as they abandon the said canal, so drain the same as not to leave stagnant water, by which the health of the citizens along the line of said canal might be injuriously affected.

8. The General Assembly shall at all times have the right to so regulate the charges for local and way travel and freight over the route of said Richmond and Alleghany Railroad as to prevent unjust discrimination against such local and way travel and freight.

9. This act shall be in force from its passage.

And whereas, the said General Assembly passed another act approved the fourth day of March, A. D., 1880, entitled "An act defining the conditions of conveyance and recordation under any sale the James River and Kanawha Company may make of its works and franchises," Which act is in the words and figures, following, to-wit:

1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Virginia, That in any contract the James River and Kanawha Company may make for the sale of its works and franchises it may consent, with the approval of the Board of Public Works, that iron rails may be temporarily laid instead of steel rails, and that twelve months additional time for construction may be given for all sections to be laid with steel rails made in Virginia.

2. Any purchaser of such works and franchises may sell the same to the Richmond and Alleghany Railroad Company, or to any other corporation authorized by law to purchase.

3. The tax upon the recordation of the deed conveying said works and franchises, shall be one thousand two hundred and fifty dollars, and if the purchaser shall immediately convey the same to a corporation no additional tax shall be required for recordation.

4. This act shall be in force from its passage.

And whereas, the said General Assembly also passed another act approved the fourth day of March, A. FARMERS BANK OF VIRGINIA.

January 1, 1859. Page 24, Document 14.

Had surplus and contingent fund of	$	343,477 53
And profits of the institution		166,695 72
Total available for dividends		510,173 25
In 1859 dividends were declared for		236,317 50
being 7½ per cent. on $3,150,900.00 Capital, which, if taken out of the above would leave a balance of	$	273,855 75
Instead of this the bank showed on January 1, 1860, page 24, Document 14
Surplus and Contingent	$	331,040 09
Profits of the Institution		145,813 47
	$	476,853 56

Which proves conclusively that the amount of $166,695.72 WAS NOT the entire earnings.

Advance now to the next year, January 1, 1860, page 24, Document 14.

Surplus and Contingent Fund was	$	331,040 09
Profits of the Institution		145,813 47
	$	476,853 56
Dividends for 1860, 7¼ per cent. on $3,150,900.00	$	228,440 25
Which would leave a balance of		248,413 31
Instead of this the bank showed January 1, 1861, pages 14 and 15, Document 14
Surplus and Contingent	$	337,067 05
Profits of the Institution		138,101 18
Or	$	475,168 23

Which proves conclusively that $145,813.47 WAS NOT the entire earnings. Therefore, we can confidently state that $138,101.18 was not the total earnings for year ending January 1, 1861.

EXCHANGE BANK OF VIRGINIA.

December 31, 1858, page 46, Document 14, shows in this bank..
"Excess of Surplus and Assets" Dec. 31, 1858	$	391,955 50
"Excess of Surplus and Assets" Dec. 31, 1859	$	359,632 71
This latter item is on page 28, 1861, statement, divided as follows:
Contingent Fund	$	205,047 67
Profits of the Institution		154,585 04
	$	359,632 71

Thus surely indicating the "identity" of Contingent Funds with surplus and profits as contended for by Mr. Hillman. It also indicated the correctness of the following:

Exchange Bank of Virginia and Branches, December 31, 1859, pages 46 and 47, Document 14.

EXCESS OF ASSETS, OR SURPLUS—
Contingent Fund	$	205,047 67
Profits of the Institution	$	154,585 04
Total	$	359,532 71
Then was declared a dividend in 1859 of 9 per cent. on $3,048,600.00 Capital Stock or	$	274,374 00
Leaving a balance of	$	285,158 71
Instead of this, the bank showed on December 31, 1860—
Contingent Fund	$	191,584 24
Profits of the Institution	$	150,586 05
Total	$	342,170 29

Proving conclusively that $154,585.04 was NOT the entire earnings.

DEFENDANT'S EXHIBIT No. 15.

In matter of the Potomac Steamboat Company stock, included in the assets of the Richmond, Fredericksburg and Potomac Railroad, March 31, 1861, $38,900.00.

Page 350, R., F. & P. Report of 1853, referring to the Washington and Fredericksburg Steamship Company (the original company of the Potomac Company, says: "In consequence of the low price paid for the steamboat company stock, the railroad company have since received 12 to 14 per cent. annual dividends," but states that this year (1853) the steamboat company lost money because they had to make connection with two trains per day. This loss was made the basis of a more liberal allowance by the R., F. & P. to the steamboat company in the division of rates, and then the steamboat company seems to have just paid its expenses.

Page 502, March 31, 1861, Report shows that the four boats of this company were seized by the United States Government for transports and war vessels. On the same report a dividend is shown on this stock and carried in surplus, of $32,360.00.

In April, 1862, page 507, they had credited this account $83,385.00, which increase of $50,025.00 was explained in the report of November, 1861 (written and not paged), when it was stated that Captain J. M. Robinson had turned over to the State the $50,025.00, their share of the amount paid by the United States Government for the four boats. This establishes that January 1, 1861, this asset was at least worth par.

In the matter of bills receivable:

This account varies from year to year, sometimes greater and sometimes less than the amount March 31, 1861. There is also shown in the disbursements from year to year purchases of bills receivable, hence it is inferrable that the account was good and collectible.

In the matter of value of cost of road and equipment:

The cost is carried forward carefully year to year, generally under classified headings, such as "Engineering," "Grading," "Bridges," etc., and contains no items that are not legitimate.

They had a yearly report by directors as to general conditions of road, and in almost every instance they report on roadway and rolling stock, and the report is always in excellent condition, showing that the repairs and renewals had taken care to keep the road in good condition.

In addition to this, we have the following items of "extraordinary" expenses charged to operating expenses, which extra expenses were additional items of cost of road and equipment.

Page 295, R., F. & P. Report, September 30, 1848, shows expenditures from earnings in capital accounts not charged to cost of road and equipment	$ 11,266 46

Page 263, 1852 report, says that the revenue has been sufficient not only to pay current expenses and the usual dividend, but to lay down heavier rail and carry 9 to 10,000 to surplus, no specific amount mentioned, but not charged to cost of road and equipment.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT
WASHINGTON
June 1, 1908.

Office of
AUDITOR FOR WAR DEPARTMENT
In replying quote initials

Hon. John Lamb,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

My Dear Mr. Lamb:

In reply to letter of John B. Lightfoot, Jr., Atty., Richmond, Va., referred by you to the Comptroller of the Treasury, May 22, 1908, and by him forwarded to this office, May 23, 1908, in reference to charge of $16,933.70 made against the State of Virginia, in settlement No. 7554 of the year of 1889, I have the honor to inform you that the amount charged against the State was deposited to the credit of Francis H. Pierpont as Governor of Virginia for the use of said State, in supplying arms and munitions of war to loyal citizens in revolted States, under Act of Congress of July 31, 1861 (12 Stat. 283) by Daniel Lamb, Disbursing Agent of the United States as follows:

In Merchants and Mechanics Bank of Wheeling,

Nov. 18, 1861	$7,500 00
In Northwest Bank of Virginia,
Wheeling, Nov. 18, 1861	7,500 00
In Northwest Bank of Virginia,
Wheeling, May 1, 1863	1,923 70
Total	$16,923 70

The money thus deposited was all applied in payment of Governor Pierpont's checks.

When the State of Virginia presented her claim for reimbursement of expenses incurred in aiding the United States in suppressing the rebellion, the accounting officers of the Treasury allowed amounts as follows:

July 4, 1862	$14,319 24
Feb 11, 1868	6,128 62
Dec. 5, 1868	8,779 32
Dec. 18, 1868	16,022 11
Total	$45,249 29

From the amount thus allowed the amount of $16,923.70 deposited to the credit of the Governor should have been deducted as an advance payment on such account, and it appears that one advance of $12,000.00 made directly from the United States Treasury was deducted, but the advance made through Mr. Lamb was not known to the accounting officers of the Treasury at the time of the settlement of Virginia's claim, Mr. Lamb's account not having been settled until a later date.

The net allowance to the State on said claim appears therefore to have been greater by $16,923.70 than was the amount really due.

In a subsequent claim of the State of Virginia under the provisions of the Act of May 27, 1902, however, there was found due the State the sum of $16,929.50, from which was deducted $16,923.70, the amount not heretofore deducted, leaving a balance of $5.50, which was paid the State in settlement No. 20,159, dated September 22, 1902.

Respectfully,

Auditor.

E. G. November 13, 1913.

The Honorable,

The Secretary of the Treasury:

Sir:

Referring to your indorsement of the 10th instant on the letter of the Hon. W. E. Chilton, U. S. Senate, requesting a copy of the settlement made with the State of Virginia, concerning certain bonds of the State of Virginia which were held by the United States in trust for certain Indian tribes. I have the honor to inform you that, under the provisions of the Omnibus Claims Act of May 27, 1902 (32 Stat., 235), a settlement was made by this office under date of September 22, 1902, in which the mutual accounts between the State of Virginia and the United States were brought down to the period where they most nearly balanced, as provided in said act.

The statement of the account was as follows:

Principal due the State		$ 298,369 74
6% interest from July 1, 1814, to Feb. 11, 1894		1,425,212 79
		$1,723,582 53
From which deduct as follows:
Principal of bonds held by United States	$ 594,800 00
Interest from Jan. 1, 1861, to Feb. 11, 1894	1,181,669 33
	$1,776,469 33
Less interest at 4% for 3 years on $531,800.00	69,816 00
	$1,706,653 33
Add as offset amount charged the State on Treasury Settlement No. 7554, of 1889	16,923 70

In explanation of this statement it is proper to add that the principal given above was the amount due July 14, 1829, after crediting all payments by the United States on the basis of partial payments and the interest includes $61,949.87 due at that date. The balance of the interest is that computed on the given principal from July 14, 1829.

The bonds on which interest was charged the State of Virginia in the above settlement consists of Virginia State stock, which had been purchased by the United States, as Trustee for certain Indian tribes, amounting to $531,800.00, and the balance of $13,000.00 was bonds of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company, which were guaranteed by the State of Virginia, likewise acquired by the United States, as Trustee for certain Indian tribes.

Respectfully,

J. L. BAITY, Auditor.

Showing the Total Cost to Virginia of the Bonds issued for Interest under the Act of March 2, 1866, under various funding acts.

The foregoing computation is made on the assumption that the bonds of 1866 were scaled by the acts of 1871 and 1879 and 1882, which were the most drastic of the Virginia scaling acts. If the bonds were scaled under the acts of 1871, 1879 and 1892, the result would be as follows:

Principal as above at January 1, 1879		$ 7,142,325 16
Interest from January 1, 1879, to July 1, 1891, 12½ years:
at 3% for 10 years	30%
at 4% for 2½ years	10%
	40%	2,856,930 06
		$ 9,999,255 22
19-28ths of which is (per act of February 20, 1892), (century)		6,785,209 14
Interest from July 1, 1891, to October 1, 1914:
10 years at 2%	20%
13¼ years at 3%	39¾%
	59¾%	4,054,162 46
		$10,839,371 60

If, on the other hand, the bonds were not scaled under the act of 1879, which was a refunding act of comparatively minor importance, on the basis of the 1881-2 settlement, the result would be as follows:

Principal, as above, in 1871		$ 5,830,915 76
Interest from July 1, 1871, to July 1, 1882:
$ 14,577.29 at 5% for 11 years	$ 8,017 51
$5,816,338.47 at 6% for 11 years	3,838,783 39
		3,846,800 90
		$ 9,677,716 66

PLAINTIFF'S SUPPLEMENTAL EXHIBIT No. 1 A.

Showing the Total Cost to Virginia of the Bonds issued for Interest under the Act of March 2, 1866, under various funding acts.

Scaled under act of 1882:
Principal at 53%.....	$3,090,385 35
Interest at 100%.....	3,846,800 90
		$ 6,937,186 25
Interest from July 1, 1882, to October 1, 1914:
3% for 32¼ years, or 96¾%.....		6,711,727 70
		$13,648,913 95
On the basis of the 1871 and 1892 settlements the result would be as follows:
Principal as above in 1871.....		$ 5,830,915 76
Interest from July 1, 1871, to July 1, 1891:
$ 14,577.29 at 5% for 20 years.....	$ 14,577 29
$5,816,338.47 at 6% for 20 years.....	6,979,606 16
		6,994,183 45
		$12,825,099 21
19-28ths of which is (per act of February 20, 1892).....		$ 8,702,745 89
Interest from July 1, 1891, to October 1 1914—23¼ years:
10 years at 2%.....	20 %
13¼ years at 3%.....	39¾%
	59¾%	5,199,890 67
		$13,902,636 56

The foregoing computations are on the basis that no interest was paid upon the bonds issued under the acts of 1866, 1871 and 1879, except in refunding.

If such interest had in fact been paid when due, it would increase the amounts given above, because the act of 1879 scaled interest 50% and the act of 1892 scaled both interest and principal by 9-28ths of their sum total. If interest had actually been paid, it would have been paid according to the bonds, and not according to the subsequent scale.

Computation showing the amount West Virginia would pay on her portion of the old debt of the Undivided State of Virginia, if calculated on the basis shown in the "Brief for the Bondholding Creditors," submitted at the October, 1913, term of the Supreme Court of the United States.

(See Schedule 5 in this Brief, page 125)

The Principal Sum Basis used in the following calculation (1), is the aggregate amount of Virginia's settlements to October 1, 1913, as shown in Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 22 (September, 1914).

Interest paid by Virginia, January 1, 1861, to October 1, 1913	$41,071,219 02

1. If West Virginia had treated her share in the same manner in which Virginia has, since January 1, 186[illegible], her total payment in relation to Virginia's would be 30.7189% of $77,857,885.74, which is equivalent to 23.5% of the unscaled debt, or $23,917,086 06

2. If West Virginia had treated her portion of the debt, viz.: $7,182,507.46, as provided by her Constitution, the result would be as follows:

"In 1860 there were sixty-six banks and branches in the State, with a capital of $15,520,550.00 and a circulation of $12,000,000.00. Of these, twenty were located in West Virginia, with a capital of $3,468,800.00; the residue, forty-six, were in this State, with a capital of $11,631,900.00. The amount of dividends and bonus paid into the treasury by these banks in 1860 was $368,853.43. Such of them as are located in this State have been ruined by circumstances over which they had no control. Their stocks are worthless, and their circulation selling in your streets at from ten to thirty cents on the dollar. The State owned of the stock of these banks, estimating the value per share at par, $3,760,020.00."

"State securities were selling in 1860 at par, or at a price very nearly approximating it. They are selling now at only forty cents on the dollar. Thus sixty per cent of the value of your stock and bonds held principally by your own citizens, has been destroyed by the fortunes of war."

Tuesday, February 4, 1868.

VIRGINIA & TENNESSEE RAILROAD.

Present: All the members.

Whereas, by Act of the General Assembly of Virginia, passed on the 9th day of February, 1853, entitled "An act authorizing a loan to the Virginia & Tennessee Railroad Company," a loan of one million of dollars to said company was authorized by the Board of Public Works for or on behalf of the Commonwealth, on the terms prescribed in said act, and in pursuance thereof, said loan was made and the said company, in order to secure the payment of the interest and principal thereof, did, on the 26th day of March 1853 execute to the said board a mortgage of that date which was duly recorded in the office of the Hustings Court of Lynchburg, and whereas, the semi-annual interest and principal of said debt due and payable to the Board of Public Works of Virginia on the 1st day of January, and of July in each year, being the sum of $35,000, on the first day of said months has not been paid in whole or in part since the first day of July, 1863, but remain wholly due and unpaid to the said board, so that at this time there remains due and unpaid thereon the sum of $315,000, exclusive of interest on such arrearages; and whereas, during the late war, and while the authorities of the State Government at Richmond City, adhering to the Confederate States, and while and when the said Railroad Company had no right to pay, and no officer of said State government had any right to receive payment of the principal or interest or any part thereof, or specified in the mortgage aforesaid, according to the terms thereof, or according to law, under and as recognized by the said State government or otherwise, in whatever currency or money it might be tendered, yet the Second Auditor of said State Government received from the president of the said railroad company in pretended satisfaction of the debt and interest, then not due but secured by said mortgage, certain sums in Confederate treasury notes at par, though grossly depreciated and almost worthless, to wit: On the 26th June, 1863, $200,000; on the 30th June, 1863, $300,000; on the 6th August, 1863, $100,000; on the 7th August, 1863, $100,000 and on the 11th September, 1863, $186,685—in all, $886,685, which act of the Second Auditor was unauthorized and illegal and void; and whereas, the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund, at a meeting on the 5th December, 1864, as appears by their records reciting that said act of said Second Auditor was unauthorized and that they had no control over said Confederate treasury notes other than to return it, ordered that said Second Auditor return said notes to said company by his warant on the Treasury "on account of the money paid into the Treasury without authority"; and whereas, in pursuance of said order, the said Second Auditor made and presented to the president of said railroad company, his warrant on the Treasury, and the said president refused to receive the same, by reason whereof, the said Confederate Treasury notes unlawfully received remained in the Treasury until they perished; and whereas, it is represented to this Board that the funds of the said Virginia & Tennessee Railroad Company have been attached at Knoxville, Tennessee, whereby the rights and interests of the Board and Commonwealth are jeoparded and may be injured, and it seems to the board necessary and proper that prompt measures should be adopted to protect the rights and interests aforesaid; it is therefore

Resolved, that the principal and interest on the said loan of $1,000,000 to the Virginia & Tennessee Railroad Company, falling due after the first day of July 1863, according to the terms of the mortgage of said company above mentioned, remain wholly unpaid and due to the Board of Public Works of Virginia, for the Commonwealth of Virginia, as also the interest on the several arrearages.

Resolved, that the receipt of the Confederate currency by the Second Auditor from the said Virginia & Tennessee Railroad Company or an officer thereof, above mentioned, was wholly unauthorized and illegal and void, and constitutes no payment of discharge of the indebtedness of the said company described in, and secured by the aforesaid mortgage.

Resolved, that the Governor be and is hereby authorized and requested to adopt such measures as he may deem proper for the protection of the rights and interests of the Board and the Commonwealth secured by the mortgage aforesaid, now jeoparded by the said attachments at Knoxville, and that he adopt such other measures as he may deem necessary and proper for securing the payment of the principal and interest due under said mortgage.

And then the board adjourned.

States Treasury notes, on account of a debt of the company for money loaned to the same by the State; and whereas, it further appears that such payment into the Treasury was made without authority of the Board of said Commissioners of the Sinking Fund, and after a decision by this board, that they had no authority to receive it; and that this board has no further or other control over said money than to return it; it is, therefore,

Ordered, that the Second Auditor do issue his warrant on the Treasury in favor of said Virginia & Tennessee Railroad Company for eight hundred and eighty-six thousand six hundred and eighty-five dollars forty-seven cents in Confederate States Treasury notes on account of the money so paid into the Treasury without authority.

And then the Commissioners adjourned.

Extract from

REPORT OF THE SECOND AUDITOR OF VIRGINIA.

For the Fiscal Year Ended September 30, 1904.

Relating to the settlement of the claim of the Commonwealth of Virginia vs. the United States.

In my last annual report I referred to the auspicious fact that a settlement of the long standing counter claims between Virginia and the United States, and involving more than two million dollars, was rendered susceptible by an act of Congress authorizing the adjustment of such claims. I now make the gratifying announcement that this account has been settled finally, and in a manner which not only protects Virginia's interest as it then appeared, but has also removed the last possibility of any future litigation on the subject, which might affect and disturb most seriously the present satisfactory condition of our public debt, and the welfare of the State in other respects as well.

The settlement included in its terms not only the surrender by the United States Government of the entire amount of Virginia bonds which it held, amounting to $594,000,000, and its claim for past due interest at 6 per cent. from January 1, 1861, aggregating more than $2,000,000.00, but also, and which may be taken as evidence of finality—the payment to the State of the nominal balance of five dollars and fifty cents, which was established in the settlement to be due to Virginia.

The act which rendered the settlement of this account possible was approved on May 27, 1902, and is known as the "Omnibus Claims Act"; and as result of the vigilance, energy and persistent effort on the part of our senators in Congress, it was so framed as to include in its equitable provisions a settlement of the account between the United States and Virginia.

The impression has quite generally prevailed—and my opinion coincided therewith, before I had occasion to investigate the facts in the case—viz.: that Virginia had a definite and ascertained right of demand against the United States for advances made in aid of the war of 1812 with Great Britain. But the facts developed that she only had an equitable claim, based upon the asumption that by a different mode of calculation at the time the amounts advanced were refunded, there would remain a large balance due the State. As a matter of fact, all the direct advancements were refunded during and at the close of the war of 1812. And in 1825 interest was allowed and paid to the extent of $178,500.00, which settlement was then and afterwards, regarded by the United States Government as a finality. Yet the State of Virginia never abandoned her claim for a resettlement of the account on a different basis, and sought at the hands of Congress a proper recognition of her demands. In the year 1857 the principle was recognized in the settlement of a similar claim with the State of Maryland, and thereby established a precedent. The Civil War, however, came on soon thereafter, and its results tended greatly to hinder the recognition of any such claim on the part of Virginia.

It will thus be perceived that Virginia's claim had no real legal existence till recognized by act of Congress—that was never done until the Omnibus Claims Act of May 27, 1902 was enacted, and even then its terms and provisions were such as to require strict legal proof of the items of our account. As it was, there is grave doubt if the claim would ever have been recognized but for the fact that the government held the bonds of the Commonwealth, and it would be an easy mode of adjustment of the counter-liabilities by allowing the one to offset the other.

THE DIVISION OF THE ORDINARY EXPENSES OF GOVERNMENT IS MADE BY THE PARTIES TO THIS CAUSE AS FOLLOWS:

PLAINTIFF:

"The Average Total Population" including slaves is construed to mean the average for each decade determined by averaging the census at the beginning and at the end of that decade. The average total population so found determines the proportion in which the Total Ordinary Expense for that decade is to be charged to the two States. (See page 3 for details.)

The average population and the percentages are as follows:

Between March 19th, 1823 and 1830 (estimated)	Virginia	996,340	85.9789%	West Virginia	162,479	14.0211%

The Ordinary Expenses of Government divided by Decades on the above percentages:

vs.

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA.

To the Honorable the Chief Justice and Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States:

Your petitioner, The State of West Virginia, by William G. Conley, Attorney General, in pursuance of the notice duly given to the plaintiff and filed herein, humbly prays leave to be permitted in some proper way under the order of this court to take and file herein testimony, oral and documentary, for the purpose of proving that the plaintiff, The Commonwealth of Virginia, has no interest or ownership in the subject-matter of this bill.

Your petitioner further shows and avers that no opportunity has been given to the petitioner to take this testimony; that it is testimony pertinent to the issues in this cause as made in the bill and answer filed herein.

That this testimony was not pertinent to any matter referred to the special master, and no testimony could properly have been admitted by him in relation thereto under the terms of the decree of reference.

Your petitioner further avers that this petition is not filed and motion made for the purpose of delay, but alone for the purpose of properly presenting this cause to the court.

And as in duty bound your petitioner will ever pray.

vs.

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA.

Now comes the State of West Virginia, defendant herein, by William G. Conley, her attorney general, and respectfully moves this honorable court to postpone the hearing of this cause until the same can be argued before and considered by a full bench, for the following reasons:

FIRST. Because the controversy herein is between two sovereign States.

SECOND. Because most of the basic questions involved herein are of great and far-reaching importance. They involve all the measures and acts resulting in the creation of the State of West Virginia. The matters in controversy have been long pending and have aroused deep interest and created widely differing convictions between the citizens of the two States. They have been the subject of legislation and public discussion to such degree that the hearing and determination of this cause before and by all the justices of this honorable court is in the highest sense proper and desirable.

THIRD. Because, in the present posture of this suit, all questions in respect of law and merits, are still open and stand for argument and judgment, except the question of the jurisdiction of this honorable court to hear and determine the cause which has been heretofore decided "without prejudice to any question."

Charleston, West Virginia.

Please take notice that in the suit of the Commonwealth of Virginia v. the State of West Virginia, Original No. ——, pending in the Supreme Court of the United States at Washington, D. C., I shall, on Monday the 9th day of October, 1911, move the said court to proceed with a further hearing and determination of said case, and to settle and determine all questions left open and undetermined by its decision rendered on the sixth day of March, 1911, and will base said motion on the record of the case and the facts stated in the foregoing statement in writing, and exhibits filed therewith.

Respectfully,

COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA,

By Samuel W. Williams

Attorney General of Virginia.

In the Supreme Court of the United States

Number ——, Original.

October Term, 1911.

COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA,

vs.

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA.

MOTION OF THE COMPLAINANT.

The Commonwealth of Virginia, through Samuel W. Williams, her Attorney General, shows to the court:

1. That upon the publication of the decision of the court made in the above entitled cause on the 6th day of March, 1911, the Virginia Debt Commission, which by law was "authorized and empowered by and with the advice and approval of the Attorney General of Virginia, to take such action and institute such proceedings on behalf of the State, as may, in the judgment of said Commission and Attorney General, be needful and proper to protect the interest of the State, and bring about and carry into effect a settlement as aforesaid" (see Record p. 49), held a session in Richmond, Virginia, on the 20th of April, 1911, and proceeded with the approval of the Attorney General to take such action on the part of Virginia, as in their judgment was proper to carry into effect the suggestion of this court, contained in the opinion delivered by Mr. Justice Holmes, in the following words:

> "As this is no ordinary commercial suit, but, as we have said, a quasi-international difference referred to this court in reliance upon the honor and constitutional obligations of the States concerned, rather than upon ordinary remedies, we think it best at this stage, to go no further, but to await the effect of a conference between the parties which, whatever the outcome, must take place."

2. That this court having determined the share of the principal of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia for which West Virginia is liable, in manner and form as set forth in its decision, but left the question of the interest on said debt to be adjusted by a conference between the two States, the Virginia Debt Commission, by and with the approval of the Attorney General, the official body of the Commonwealth fully empowered to deal with this subject, in obedience to the recommendation of the court, took the following action:

3. It addressed a communication to the Governor of West Virginia in the words and figures following:

RICHMOND, VA., April 20, 1911.

To His Excellency,

The Governor of West Virginia.

Sir:—The "Virginia Debt Commission," constituted and acting on behalf of Virginia under the joint resolution of the General Assembly of that State, approved March 6th, 1894, and the act of said General Assembly approved March 6th, 1900, was "authorized and directed to negotiate with the State of West Virginia a settlement and adjustment of the proportion of the public debt of the original State of Virginia, proper to be borne by West Virginia," as shown by copies of said Resolution and Act hereto attached.

In the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States delivered on the 6th of March, 1911, by Mr. Justice Holmes, in the case of the Commonwealth of Virginia v. State of West Virginia, there was announced a "decision with respect to the basis of liability and the share of the principal of the debt of Virginia that West Virginia assumed."

With respect to the amount of interest on such principal, the court made no decision, but in referring thereto said: "As this is no ordinary commercial suit, but, as we have said, a quasi-international difference referred to this court, in reliance upon the honor and constitutional obligations of the States concerned rather than upon ordinary remedies, we think it best, at this stage, to go no further, but to await the effect of a conference between the parties, which, whatever the outcome, must take place." A copy of said opinion is also hereto attached.

At a meeting of the Virginia Debt Commission, held in Richmond, Va., on the 20th day of April, 1911, the subject of the "conference between the parties," suggested by the court, received consideration, and it was resolved that the Commission, through its Chairman, should bring the matter to your attention, and request that you will, at the earliest convenient moment, lay it before the Legislature of West Virginia, now soon to assemble, or take such other and more appropriate course as will lead to that conference between the two States, in order to bring about a final and complete conclusion of the cause.

The Virginia Debt Commission ventures to indulge the hope that you are in accord with it in desiring a speedy termination of this litigation, and that you will do whatever lies in your power to bring about an early conference between the representatives of the two States.

Very respectfully,

(Signed) JOHN B. MOON,
Chairman Virginia Debt Commission.

Attest:

(Signed) JOSEPH BUTTON,
Secretary.

Resolved Further, That the said letter be transmitted with all convenient despatch to the Governor of West Virginia by a Special Committee consisting of Messrs. Flood, Rhea and Downing, any two members to have power to act, who shall report such reply as they may receive to the Chairman of this Commission.

The above action of the Virginia Debt Commission is approved as is provided by Act approved March 6, 1900.

(Signed) SAMUEL W. WILLIAMS,
Attorney General of Virginia.

A copy: Teste

(Signed) JOSEPH BUTTON,
Secretary.

And this communication the said Commission caused to be transmitted to the Governor of West Virginia by a committee composed of three members of the Commission, any two of whom were empowered to act, which committee delivered the same into the hands of the Honorable William E. Glasscock, Governor of West Virginia, at Charleston, on the second day of May, 1911, as will appear from the following letter of the Governor of West Virginia to the Governor of Virginia:

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA,
Governor's Office,
Charleston, May 9, 1911.

HON. WM. HODGES MANN,
Governor of Virginia,
Richmond, Va.

Dear Governor Mann:—Late in the evening of the 2d instant I received a call from Messrs. Wm. F. Rhea and H. H. Downing, bearing letters of recommendation from you and representing the Virginia Debt Commission. They made the following request:

"At a meeting of the Virginia Debt Commission, held in Richmond, Virginia, on the 20th day of April, 1911, the subject of the 'conference between the parties,' suggested by the court, received consideration, and it was resolved that the Commission, through its Chairman, should bring the matter to your attention, and request that you will, at the earliest convenient moment, lay it before the Legislature of West Virginia, now soon to assemble, or take such other and more appropriate course as will lead to that conference between the two States, in order to bring about a final and complete conclusion of the cause.

"The Virginia Debt Commission ventures to indulge the hope that you are in accord with it in desiring a speedy termination of this litigation, and that you will do whatever lies in your power to bring about an early conference between the representatives of the two States."

Their request relates to my message to the Legislature at the extraordinary session which is to convene on May 16th. Mr. Rhea, of the Commission, particularly seemed to think that early, if not immediate, response should be made. You, of course, will appreciate the fact that it would be wholly improper to advise anyone of the contents of my communication to the Legislature or even in general of my purpose relative thereto in advance of the submission of the message to the Legislature itself.

With greatest respect, I remain,

Very truly yours,
(Signed) WM. E. GLASSCOCK,
Governor.

4. To this communication the Governor of West Virginia has made no response, either to said committee, or to the Virginia State Debt Commission which it represented; nor has the State of West Virginia, through any of its constituted authorities, or in any other manner, taken any action with reference to the overtures so made by the State of Virginia for a conference between the States to effect an amicable settlement of the matters referred to in the suggestion of this court in its decision above referred to.

5. That on a day prior to the 20th of April, 1911, the Governor of West Virginia had issued a proclamation convening the Legislature of West Virginia in extraordinary session for the consideration of two matters of business specified in said proclamation, but that said Legislature did not assemble in extra session until the 16th day of May, 1911, and on that day there was sent to the Legislature the "Message of Governor Glasscock to the Legislature of 1911. Extra Session, May 16, 1911," a copy of which will be filed herewith.

6. The attention of the court is respectfully called to so much of said message as relates to the Virginia Debt case, and particularly to the paragraph of said message, next to the last, which is in the following words:

> "The Constitution provides that the Governor may convene the Legislature whenever in his opinion the public safety or welfare shall require it; and that he shall convene it on application in writing of three-fifths of the members elected to each House. If, however, without such formal action by three-fifths of the members of each House, a majority of the members of your honorable body should in any manner express to me the opinion that the Legislature should be called into extraordinary session to consider the conditions presented by the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States, I should deem it sufficient evidence that a proper condition existed for the convening of the Legislature for that purpose. I shall be glad to be advised from time to time of the views of the members of the Legislature on this subject."

The Constitution of West Virginia provides (Art. 7, Sec. 7):

> "The Governor may on extraordinary occasions convene, at his own instance, the Legislature, but when so convened, it shall enter upon no business except that stated in the proclamation by which it is convened."

7. The proclamation of the Governor convening the Legislature in extra session had been issued before the Virginia Debt Commission met in Richmond on the 20th of April, 1911, but the Legislature did not assemble in session until the 16th day of May, 1911, so that twenty-six days intervened between the date of the communication from the Commission to the Governor, and the assembling of the Legislature in extra session.

The Virginia Debt Case was not one of the subjects of business mentioned in the proclamation convening the Legislature, but the intervening time was sufficient to have allowed the Governor to include this subject in a further proclamation, before the Legislature assembled, or to have made it the subject of another proclamation, after the Legislature had assembled, and before it had adjourned and dispersed from the Capitol.

The Constitution of the State laid the responsibility upon the Governor, of convening the Legislature, for the consideration of such business as he might state in his proclamation convening that body, but it here appears that the Governor deemed it wisest to cast this responsibility upon the members of the Legislature, or upon a majority of that body, by referring to them the question as to "whether a proper condition existed for the convening of the Legislature for that purpose."

8. Complainant shows your Honors, that under the Constitution of West Virginia, the Legislature of that State (unless specifically convened by the Governor in extraordinary session) can meet bienially only, its regular sessions beginning on the second Wednesday in January in each alternate year—and that the last regular session of that body was held under that Constitution beginning on the second Wednesday in January of the present year.

See Section 18, Article VI, of Constitution of West Virginia, which is in the words and figures following:

> "The Legislature shall assemble at the seat of government biennially, and not oftener, unless convened by the Governor. The first session of the Legislature, after the adoption of this Constitution, shall commence on the third Tuesday of November, 1872; and the regular biennial session of the Legislature shall commence on the second Wednesday of January, 1875, and every two years thereafter, on the same day."

There will accordingly be no regular session of the Legislature of that State until the session commencing in due course on the second Wednesday in January, 1913.

9. Complainant farther respectfully shows your honors that the Commonwealth of Virginia, and her duly constituted representatives, have been ready and anxious to meet the authorized representatives of West Virginia for the purpose of an amicable adjustment of the important question left undecided by the decision of this court, in an effort to reach some just and equitable conclusion as to what interest under all of the circumstances of the case, West Virginia should assume and pay on her equitable share of the common indebtedness, provided there was any hope held out that such a conference would result in any equitable and prompt adjustment of that question; but from the manner in which the proposal made by the Commonwealth of Virginia in that behalf has been received, and from other facts and circumstances shown by the record, she has been reluctantly constrained to the conclusion that there is no likelihood whatever that any satisfactory result would be attained by a renewal of, or by farther pressing the overture already made, and which has been so completely ignored.

10. The foregoing recitals as to the action of the Virginia Debt Commission and the Attorney General, the overtures they made to the Governor of West Virginia, and through him to the Legislature of that State, and the comments of the Governor of West Virginia thereon, are supported by the report of the committee appointed by the Virginia Debt Commission to wait upon Governor Glasscock, and the documents filed therewith, especially Governor Glasscock's message to the Legislature of West Virginia on the 16th of April last and documents printed in the appendix thereto, a copy of which will be attached hereunto as part hereof.

11. The Commonwealth of Virginia having thus exhausted the means within her control for bringing about a conference between the two States as recommended by the court, can, under the circumstances, derive no hope or expectation that West Virginia will make any agreement with Virginia for a settlement in the manner indicated by this Court, and is convinced that the time has come for this court in its own way to determine the questions left open by its decision already rendered, and to grant the complainant complete relief.

To this end she therefore respectfully urges that the court will, in accordance with the alternative suggestion made in its decision, recommit the cause to the Special Master with instructions to ascertain and report forthwith to the court the amount of interest which the State of West Virginia should be required to pay on the principal sum already indicated by the court, or that the court will proceed otherwise, as it may determine, to adjudicate that question.

The Commonwealth of Virginia respectfully urges and moves the court that the cause be speeded so that a final decree may be made therein and this controversy brought to a close.

COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA,

By Saml. W. Williams

Attorney General of Virginia.

APPENDIX.

RICHMOND, VA., September 20th, 1911.

To the Virginia Debt Commission in Session at Richmond.

GENTLEMEN:—On the 20th day of April, 1911, the Virginia Debt Commission, in session at Richmond, adopted a resolution authorizing and directing John B. Moon, Chairman of said Commission, to sign on behalf of the Commission, a letter in the following form, the same to be attested by the Secretary of the Commission, addressed to His Excellency, the Governor of West Virginia:

To His Excellency,
The Governor of West Virginia.

Sir:—The "Virginia Debt Commission," constituted and acting on behalf of Virginia under the joint resolution of the General Assembly of that State, approved March 6th, 1894, and the act of said General Assembly approved March 6th, 1900, was "authorized and directed to negotiate with the State of West Virginia a settlement and adjustment of the proportion of the public debt of the original State of Virginia, proper to be borne by West Virginia," as shown by copies of said Resolution and Act hereto attached.

In the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States delivered on the 6th of March, 1911, by Mr. Justice Holmes, in the case of the Commonwealth of Virginia v. State of West Virginia, there was announced a "decision with respect to the basis of liability and the share of the principal of the debt of Virginia that West Virginia assumed."

With respect to the amount of interest on such principal, the court made no decision, but in referring thereto said: "As this is no ordinary commercial suit, but, as we have said, a quasi-international difference referred to this court, in reliance upon the honor and constitutional obligations of the States concerned rather than upon ordinary remedies, we think it best, at this stage, to go no further, but to await the effect of a conference between the parties, which, whatever the outcome, must take place." A copy of said opinion also is hereto attached.

At a meeting of the Virginia Debt Commission, held in Richmond, Va., on the 20th day of April, 1911, the subject of the "conference between the parties," suggested by the court, received consideration, and it was resolved that the Commission, through its Chairman, should bring the matter to your attention, and request that you will, at the earliest convenient moment, lay it before the Legislature of West Virginia, now soon to assemble, or take such other and more appropriate course as will lead to that conference between the two States, in order to bring about a final and complete conclusion of the cause.

The Virginia Debt Commission ventures to indulge the hope that you are in accord with it in desiring a speedy termination of this litigation, and that you will do whatever lies in your power to bring about an early conference between the representatives of the two States.

Very respectfully,

(Signed) JOHN B. MOON,
Chairman Virginia Debt Commission.

Attest:

(Signed) JOSEPH BUTTON,
Secretary.

The said Virginia Debt Commission, at the same meeting, adopted a resolution appointing Mr. Flood and the undersigned, as a special committee, to transmit with all convenient dispatch to the Governor of West Virginia, the letter addressed to him as shown above. Mr. Flood not being able to accompany the undersigned at the time arranged for carrying out the resolution last mentioned, the undersigned proceeded to Charleston, West Virginia, on the 2nd day of May last, and in the evening of that day called on His Excellency, William E. Glasscock, Governor of West Virginia, and was very cordially received. The undersigned presented to him letters of introduction from Governor William Hodges Mann, of Virginia, and at the same time the undersigned delivered to him the communication above mentioned, together with the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Commonwealth of Virginia v. State of West Virginia, and with the act of the General Assembly of Virginia of 1894, entitled "A joint resolution to provide for adjusting with the State of West Virginia the proportion of the public debt of the original State of Virginia proper to be borne by West Virginia, for the application of whatever may be received from West Virginia to the payment of those found to be entitled to the same," approved March 6, 1894, and with an act of the General Assembly of Virginia of 1900, entitled "As act to provide for the settlement with West Virginia of the proportion of the public debt of the original State of Virginia proper to be borne by West Virginia, and for the due protection of the Commonwealth of Virginia in the premises," approved March 6th, 1900, attached thereto. The undersigned advised Governor Glasscock that they had been sent to West Virginia by the Virginia Debt Commission in pursuance of the intimation expressed in the decision of the West Virginia debt question by the Supreme Court of the United States to the effect that the representatives of the Commonwealths of Virginia and West Virginia should undertake to negotiate a settlement of the interest on that part of the debt due by West Virginia to the State of Virginia, and that they hoped that he, the Governor of West Virginia, would cause to be appointed a representative or representatives of the State of West Virginia with full authority to treat with the Virginia Debt Commission on the subject of interest to be paid by the State of West Virginia; that they believed that representatives of the two States could make an amicable adjustment of the matter in controversy. The Governor of West Virginia expressed his intention of giving the matter very thorough investigation and consideration, after which he would make such reply to said communication as he deemed necessary and proper. Up to this time neither of the undersigned has received any reply from the Governor of West Virginia to the communication delivered to him as above mentioned.

Your Committee herewith attaches to this report the message of the Governor of West Virginia to the Legislature of that State, being in extra session, May 16th, 1911, so far as it relates to the Virginia debt case. Beginning on page 15 of the message aforesaid, under the heading "Virginia Debt Case," will be seen what the Governor of West Virginia has to say to the Legislature in regard to the West Virginia Debt matter. It will be noticed that the Governor attaches to his message an appendix containing the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in Commonwealth of Virginia v. State of West Virginia, and also the Act of the General Assembly of Virginia of March 6th, 1894, above alluded to, and also the Act of the General Assembly of Virginia of March 6th, 1900, above alluded to, and also the communication signed by John B. Moon, Chairman of Virginia Debt Commission, and addressed to His Excellency, Governor of West Virginia, which communication has been above set forth in this report, and also the resolution of the Virginia Debt Commission appointing Mr. Flood and the undersigned, giving power to any two members to act to transmit with all convenient dispatch to the Governor of West Virginia the communication aforesaid. The action of the Virginia Debt Commission in communicating as aforesaid with the Governor of West Virginia, and appointing a special committee to transmit said communication to the Governor of West Virginia was approved by Samuel W. Williams, Attorney General of Virginia, attested by Joseph Button, Secretary of said Virginia Debt Commission, as the record will show.

In said appendix, on page 26, will also be seen the letter of the Governor of West Virginia, dated May 9th, 1911, addressed to Hon. William Hodges Mann, Governor of Virginia, Richmond, Va., relative to the visit of the undersigned to the Governor of West Virginia, and the purpose of same, the said letter being in answer to the letters of Governor Mann introducing the undersigned to the Governor of West Virginia, which letters are hereto attached.

Respectfully submitted,

WM. F. RHEA,
H. H. DOWNING,

The foregoing is a true copy of the report of the Committee appointed by the Virginia Debt Commission to wait upon the Governor of West Virginia in pursuance of the resolutions adopted by said Commission on the 20th day of April, 1911.

JOS. BUTTON,
Secretary of the Virginia Debt Commission.

April 25th, 1911.

Hon. William E. Glasscock,
Charleston, West Virginia.

Dear Governor:—This will be handed you by my personal friend, Hon. Wm. F. Rhea, who is a member of our State Corporation Commission, and also of the State Debt Commission of Virginia. The high character and standing of Judge Rhea, official and personal, makes it unnecessary for me to say anything in his behalf. I will, however, very highly appreciate any courtesy you can show him while in your State.

With assurance of high regard, I am,

Very truly yours,

HON. WILLIAM E. GLASSCOCK,

Charleston, West Virginia.

DEAR GOVERNOR:—Mr. H. H. Downing, of Front Royal, a gentleman of high character, a lawyer of distinction, and a member of our State Debt Commission, will, in a short time, with the other members of a committee, visit your State for conference in reference to the matters of difference between the two States which I trust can be satisfactorily adjusted. I am sure he will so commend himself to your consideration as to receive every courtesy at your hands.

I will appreciate any kindness shown him as a personal kindness to me.

With kind regards, I am,

Very truly yours,

WEST VIRGINIA

MESSAGE OF GOVERNOR GLASSCOCK TO THE LEGISLATURE OF 1911, EXTRA SESSION, MAY 16, 1911.

GOVERNOR'S MESSAGE.

To the Members of the Senate and House of Delegates:

* * * * * * * *

VIRGINIA DEBT CASE.

I deem it my duty to call your attention to the opinion filed on the 6th day of March, 1911, by the Supreme Court of the United States in the suit in equity brought and now pending in that court by the Commonwealth of Virginia against the State of West Virginia.

Late in the evening of the 2d instant, I was visited here in Charleston by two members of the Virginia Debt Commission claiming to act under the authority of Acts of the General Assembly of Virginia, approved respectively, March 6th, 1894, and March 6th, 1900. That commission has made the following request in writing:

> "At a meeting of the Virginia Debt Commission held in Richmond, Virginia, on the 20th day of April, 1911, the subject of the 'conference between the parties,' suggested by the court, received consideration and it was resolved that the Commission, through its Chairman, should bring the matter to your attention, and request that you will, at the earliest convenient moment, lay it before the Legislature of West Virginia, now soon to assemble, or take such other and more appropriate course as will lead to that conference between the two States, in order to bring about a final and complete conclusion of the cause.
> "The Virginia Debt Commission ventures to indulge the hope that you are in accord with it in desiring a speedy termination of this litigation, and that you will do whatever lies in your power to bring about an early conference between the representatives of the two States."

You will observe that my proclamation convoking you in extraordinary session was issued prior to the time of the meeting of the Virginia Debt Commission above referred to. Reference to this question was omitted therefrom, because it was thought that the initiative should come from Virginia; because I was advised that the attorneys for West Virginia were considering further proceedings in the case; and because I was not sufficiently advised of the full effect of the opinion of the court to justify me at that time in including it among the subjects of your action; nor am I yet disposed to force upon you consideration of this matter, nor to recommend to you what steps, if any, should now be taken therein.

I am not disposed to be hurried by influences in this State or elsewhere into action, without ample time for consideration, upon a matter which so very greatly affects the interests and honor of West Virginia. Many persons, aware how seriously the people of Virginia have many times been divided upon the Virginia Debt question, and how many and how bitter have been the criminations and the recriminations aroused by the consideration of this question from time to time in the General Assembly of that Commonwealth, had hoped that through the decision of the court we might, whatever the money outcome might be, escape the other and different perils which the people of Virginia have not been able to avoid.

Questions to be Considered.

Whether you will be of opinion that it is your duty to take action in this matter before the General Assembly of Virginia has acted, or will deem that the former action of the latter body in appointing the Virginia Debt Commission makes it incumbent now upon this State to take the initiative; whether you will be of opinion that a commission should be appointed to meet that commission or some other, are some of the questions which deserve to receive, and I have no doubt are receiving, the most earnest consideration of every one of you.

I append to this message a copy of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, of the two Acts of the Virginia Assembly above referred to, the written communication of the Virginia Debt Commission to me, and a copy of my letter to Governor Mann with respect thereto.

The Constitution provides that the Governor may convene the Legislature whenever in his opinion the public safety or welfare shall require it, and that he shall convene it on application in writing of three-fifths of the members elected to each House. If, however, without such formal action by three-fifths of the members of each House, a majority of the members of your Honorable Body should in any manner express to me the opinion that the Legislature should be called into extraordinary session to consider the condition presented by the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States I should deem it sufficient evidence that a proper occasion existed for the convening of the Legislature for that purpose. I shall be glad to be advised from time to time of the views of the members of the Legislature on this subject.

It shall be my pleasure to contribute in any possible way to the success of the work before you and I shall hold myself in readiness to render you any service within my power.

WM. E. GLASSCOCK,
Governor.

Charleston, West Virginia,
May 16, 1911.

APPENDIX

(Opinion of court already in record and not here printed.)

ACT OF VIRGINIA ASSEMBLY OF 1894.

A joint resolution to provide for adjusting with the State of West Virginia the proportion of the public debt of the original State of Virginia proper to be borne by West Virginia, for the application of whatever may be received from West Virginia to the payment of those found to be entitled to the same.

(Approved March 6, 1894.)

WHEREAS the general assembly of Virginia is required by the Constitution of Virginia to provide by law for adjusting with the State of West Virginia the proportion of the public debt of the original State of Virginia proper to be bourne by West Virginia; and

WHEREAS the general assembly has heretofore passed four several acts in relation to the funding and settlement of her public debt, as follows, to-wit:

FIRST. An act entitled an act to provide for the funding any payment of the public debt, approved March twenty-eighth, eighteen hundred and seventy-one.

Second. An act entitled an act to provide a plan of settlement of the public debt, approved March twenty-eighth, eighteen hundred and seventy-nine.

Third. An act entitled an act to ascertain and declare Virginia's equitable share of the debt created before and actually existing at the time of the partition of her territory and resources, and to provide for the issuance of bonds covering the same and the regular and prompt payment of interest thereon, approved February fourteenth, eighteen hundred and eighty-two; and

Fourth. An act entitled an act to provide for the settlement of the public debt of Virginia not funded under the provisions of an act entitled an act to ascertain and declare Virginia's equitable share of the debt created and actually existing at the time of the partition of her territory and resources, and to provide for the issuance of bonds covering the same and the regular and prompt payment of the interest thereon, approved February fourteenth, eighteen hundred and eighty-two, approved February twentieth, eighteen hundred and ninety-two; and

Whereas, in each of said acts provision is made for issuing to creditors of the original State of Virginia who should accept the new bonds provided for by said several acts, certificates for such proportion of the obligation surrendered by them as was deemed proper to be borne by the State of West Virginia, to-wit, one-third of the amount of said obligations, of which certificates this State holds a large amount, through the agency of the commissioners of its sinking fund and literary fund; and

Whereas the present State of Virginia has settled and adjusted, to the entire satisfaction of her people and the creditors, the liability assumed by her on account of two-thirds of the debt of the original State; now, therefore,

Be it Resolved by the Senate of Virginia (The house of delegates concurring), That a commission of seven members is hereby created and provided for, of whom the present chairman of the committee on finance and banks of the senate shall be one, and the present chairman of the committee on finance of the house of delegates shall be another; of the other five, two shall be chosen by the senate from among the persons now members of that body; two by the house of delegates from among the persons now members of that body, and one, to be a resident of this State, shall be appointed by the Governor. No member of said commission shall cease to be a member thereof by reason of ceasing to be a member of the general assembly.

Said commission shall choose its own chairman and secretary; vacancies therein occurring or existing during recess of the Legislature shall be filled by the Governor on ratification thereof by the chairman; and a majority of said commission shall be competent to act.

Said commission is hereby authorized and directed to negotiate with the State of West Virginia a settlement and adjustment of the proportion of the public debt of the original State of Virginia proper to be borne by West Virginia.

But said commission shall not proceed with said negotiations until assurances satisfactory to the commission shall have been received from the holders of a majority in amount of said certificates, exclusive of those held by the State through the agency of the board of education and sinking fund commissioners, that they desire the said commission to enter into and undertake such negotiation, and will accept the amount so ascertained to be paid by the State of West Virginia in full settlement of the one-third of the debt of the original State of Virginia which has not been assumed by the present State of Virginia. But said commission shall in no event enter into any negotiation hereunder except upon the basis that Virginia is bound only for the two-thirds of the debt of the original State which she has already provided for as her equitable proportion thereof.

All expenses incurred by said commission and said board of arbitrators, including reasonable compensation of the members thereof, shall be paid out of the proceeds of such settlement, or by the holders of said certificates who are the beneficiaries of such settlement, but without subjecting the State to any expense on this account.

And their action shall be subject to the approval or disapproval of the general assembly, and shall not be binding on the State until approved by the general assembly. The Governor is requested to communicate this joint resolution to the Governor and Legislature of West Virginia.

This joint resolution shall be in force from its psasage.

A true copy.

Clerk House of Delegates and Keeper of the Rolls of Virginia.

Fourth. An act entitled an act to provide for the settlement of the public debt of Virginia not funded under the provisions of an act entitled an act to ascertain and declare Virginia's equitable share of the debt created before and actually existing at the time of the partition of her territory and resources, and to provide for the issuance of bonds covering the same and the regular and prompt payment of the interest thereon, approved February fourteenth, eighteen hundred and eighty-two, approved February twentieth, eighteen hundred and ninety-two; and

WHEREAS in each of said acts provision is made for issuing to creditors of the original State of Virginia who should accept the new bonds provided for by said several acts, certificates for such proportion of the obligation surrendered by them as was deemed proper to be borne by the State of West Virginia—to-wit: One-third of the amount of said obligations, of which certificate this

State holds a large amount, through the agency of the commissioners of its sinking fund and literary fund; and

WHEREAS the Generaly Assembly is required by the Constitution of Virginia to provide by law for adjusting with the State of West Virginia the proportion of the debt of the original State of Virginia proper to be borne by West Virginia, but no such adjustment has ever been had; and

WHEREAS it appears that while Virginia has satisfactorily settled the two-thirds of the original debt which she assumed, yet it is possible that complications will arise with respect to said certificates which will render it desirable that she should endeavor to secure an adjustment thereof upon terms which will protect herself, but will work no injustice to West Virginia, and thus finally dispose of the only question remaining unsettled in connection with said debt; now, therefore,

1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Virginia, that the commission created and appointed under a joint resolution of this General Assembly entitled a joint resolution to provide for adjusting with the State of West Virgisia the proportion of the public debt of the original State of Virginia proper to be borne by West Virginia, for the application of whatever may be received from West Virginia to the payment of those found to be entitled to the same, approved March sixth, eighteen hundred and ninety-four, be, and said commission hereby is, authorized to receive and take upon deposit the certificates aforesaid or have the same otherwise placed or held on deposit subject to their control upon an agreement and contract on the part of the holders of said certificates that if the said commission will secure a settlement with West Virginia with respect to said certificates the said holders of said certificates so deposited will accept the amount realized on such settlement from West Virginia on said certificates as a full settlement of all their claims thereunder.

2. If at least two-thirds in amount of the said certificates issued under the act of eighteen hundred and seventy-one, exclusive of those held by the State through the agency of the board of education and the sinking fund commissioners, and at least a majority in amount, of all the other certificates aforesaid shall be so deposited or placed subject to the control of the said commission upon the agreement and contract aforesaid, then the said commission shall be authorized and empowered by and with the advice and approval of the attorney-general of Virginia to take such action and institute such proceedisgs on behalf of the state as may in the judgment of said commission and attorney-general be needful and proper to protect the interest of the state and bring about and carry into effect a settlement as aforesaid. All the expenses involved in connection with any of the matters aforesaid shall be borne by the certificate holders, as provided in the joint resolution aforesaid, and the state shall not be subjected to any expense on that account.

3. This act shall be in force from its passage.

COMMUNICATION FROM VIRGINIA DEBT COMMISSION.

RICHMOND, VA., April 20, 1911.

To His Excellency,
The Governor of West Virginia.

Sir:—The "Virginia Debt Commission," constituted and acting on behalf of Virginia under the joint resolution of the General Assembly of that State, approved March 6th, 1894, and the act of said General Assembly approved March 6th, 1900, was "authorized and directed to negotiate with the State of West Virginia a settlement and adjustment of the proportion of the public debt of the original State of Virginia, proper to be borne by West Virginia," as shown by copies of said Resolution and Act hereto attached.

In the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States delivered on the 6th of March, 1911, by Mr. Justice Holmes, in the case of the Commonwealth of Virginia v. State of West Virginia, there was announced a "decision with respect to the basis of liability and the share of the principal of the debt of Virginia that West Virginia assumed."

With respect to the amount of interest on such principal, the court made no decision, but in referring thereto said: "As this is no ordinary commercial suit, but, as we have said, a quasi-international difference referred to this court, in reliance upon the honor and constitutional obligations of the States concerned rather than upon ordinary remedies, we think it best, at this stage, to go no further, but to await the effect of a conference between the parties, which, whatever the outcome, must take place." A copy of said opinion also is hereto attached.

At a meeting of the Virginia Debt Commission, held in Richmond, Va., on the 20th day of April, 1911, the subject of the "conference between the parties," suggested by the court, received consideration, and it was resolved that the Commission, through its Chairman, should bring the matter to your attention, and request that you will, at the earliest convenient moment, lay it before the Legislature of West Virginia, now soon to assemble, or take such other and more appropriate course as will lead to that conference between the two States, in order to bring about a final and complete conclusion of the cause.

The Virginia Debt Commission ventures to indulge the hope that you are in accord with it in desiring a speedy termination of this litigation, and that you will do whatever lies in your power to bring about an early conference between the representatives of the two States.

Very respectfully,

(Signed) JOHN B. MOON,
Chairman Virginia Debt Commission.

LETTER OF GOVERNOR OF WEST VIRGINIA TO GOVERNOR OF VIRGINIA.

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA
GOVERNOR'S OFFICE.

Charleston, May 9, 1911.

HON. WM. HODGES MANN,
Governor of Virginia,
Fichmond; Va.

DEAR GOVERNOR MANN:—Late in the evening of the 2nd instant I received a call from Messrs. Wm. F. Rhea and H. H. Downing, bearing letters of recommendation from you, and representing the Virginia Debt Commission. They made the following request in writing:

"At a meeting of the Virginia Debt Commission, held in Richmond, Virginia, on the 20th day of April, 1911, the subject of the 'conference between the parties,' suggested by the court, received consideration, and it was resolved that the Commission, through its Chairman, should bring the matter to your attention, and request that you will, at the earliest convenient moment, lay it before the Legislature of West Virginia, now soon to assemble, or take such other and more appropriate course as will lead to that conference between the two states, in order to bring about a final and complete conclusion of the cause.

"The Virginia Debt Commission ventures to indulge the hope that you are in accord with it in desiring a speedy termination of this litigation, and that you will do whatever lies in your power to bring about an early conference between the representatives of the two States."

Their request relates to my message to the Legislature at the extraordinary session which is to convene on May 16th. Mr. Rhea, of the Commission, particularly, seemed to think that early, if not immediate, response should be made. You, of course, will appreciate the fact that it would be wholly improper to advise anyone of the contents of my communication to the Legislature or even in general of my purpose relative thereto in advance of the submission of the message to the Legislature itself.

With greatest respect, I remain,

Very truly yours,

Governor.

vs.

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA.

RESPONSE OF THE DEFENDANT TO THE MOTION OF THE COMPLAINANT SUBMITTED IN THE ABOVE-ENTITLED CAUSE.

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA,
By WILLIAM G. CONLEY,
Attorney General.

IN THE

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.

OCTOBER TERM, 1911.

No. 3, Original.

vs.

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA.

RESPONSE OF THE DEFENDANT TO THE MOTION OF THE COMPLAINANT SUBMITTED IN THE ABOVE-ENTITLED CAUSE.

And now on this, the tenth day of October, 1911, comes the respondent, the State of West Virginia, by William G. Conley, Esquire, her Attorney General, and for response to the motion submitted in the above cause to

> "recommit the cause to the Special Master with instructions to ascertain and report forthwith to the court the amount of interest which the State of West Virginia should be required to pay on the principal sum > already indicated by the court, or that the court will proceed otherwise as it may determine to adjudicate that question," says that she is advised that the court will not upon motion make such an order as that contemplated by this proceeding, which requires a determination of one of the principal points involved in the controversy in this cause, without the consent of this respondent, expressed by her counsel in court, because the grounds of said motion are based upon matters not appearing of record in the said cause; and further, there must be a hearing and consideration of the question whether or not any liability for interest exists on the part of this respondent before the court will again refer this cause to a Master.

This application should therefore be for leave to file a petition setting forth the facts fully upon which the complainant asks the relief sought by this motion. If no substantial objections were offered to the granting of such leave, then the filing of the petition would follow and the defendant could make answer thereto, and the rights of the parties as shown by the petition and answer thereto would be argued and heard by the court and such disposition be made thereof as would be proper and just.

If the proceeding were one by petition, it would become a pleading and its sufficiency could be tested by demurrer and its facts controverted by answer, evidence heard in support of and against the petition applicable to the rights of the parties arising upon it, and the proceeding heard and determined as any other matter in the cause.

It seems, therefore, that this motion ought to be dismissed and that any proceeding had for this purpose can only be properly instituted by petition duly verified, thus affording the defendant opportunity to answer the petition and controvert the facts, or introduce by way of answer any other matter proper for the consideration of the court at this stage of the case.

And the respondent not waiving its motion going to the irregularity of the procedure on the part of the complainant seeking relief as stated in said motion, but adhering to and insisting upon the same, now submits to the court the further grounds why the relief sought by said motion should not be granted.

(1) The motion is premature, as the opinion of the court was handed down on the sixth day of March, 1911, after the adjournment of the regular session of the legislature, and when the special session of the legislature called for a specific purpose could not have constitutionally considered the matter.

(2) At the time the members of the legislature which convened in special session in May, 1911, were elected, the above cause had not been finally argued, and the impression obtained generally throughout the State that Virginia would not succeed with her bill asking for relief against the State as set forth therein, as Virginia was only suing on behalf of the holders of the certificates, who were to receive the proceeds of any decree that might be entered in the cause, and upon this ground it was generally understood and believed that Virginia would not obtain any decree in her favor against West Virginia. This opinion obtained so generally that the members of the legislature were not advised as to the wishes of their constituents relating to the matters in controversy in said suit, and hence it was not expected that they would ever be called upon in their legislative capacity to act thereon.

(3) It was assumed on the part of West Virginia that the State of Virginia would not act with undue haste in reference to a conference between the two States as suggested by this court in its opinion on final hearing until the Debt Commission of Virginia, by its representatives, called upon the Governor of West Virginia, after his proclamation had been made convening the legislature in special session to assemble in the month of May, 1911, and requested the said Governor to amend his proclamation by inserting therein a provision authorizing the legislature to enter upon a consideration of the Virginia debt matter. The Governor, under the authority vested in him by the Constitution of West Virginia, being of opinion that he could not amend his proclamation so as to embody in the said call the consideration of the matter of the said debt, the same was not therefore included therein, as to have done so would have invalidated any acts performed by the legislature at such special session, and the failure of the Governor to include said matter in his proclamation was not for the purpose of evading the request or suggestion of this court in its opinion that the two States confer together touching the final settlement and adjustment of the controversy between them left undetermined by this court. The people of West Virginia are not unmindful of their obligation to meet the situation with reference to said debt as presented to them by the opinion of this court rendered in the above cause, but have it ever in mind and the subject will be considered at the next general election when the members of the next legislature will be chosen; and in one year and three months from this day the new legislature will convene in regular session, when that body can properly take up, consider, and dispose of the Virginia debt question.

(4) This respondent further avers that there is no one in West Virginia with any authority to negotiate or confer with Virginia, or any commission appointed by Virginia, in reference to the matters in controversy herein except the legislature; neither the Governor nor any other officer of the State of West Virginia nor the counsel in this cause having any power so to do.

(5) This is not an ordinary case like that obtaining between individual suitors, but is one arising between quasi sovereignties referred to this court in reliance upon the honor and constitutional obligations of the States concerned, rather than upon ordinary remedies, and in such controversies the rules which govern courts of equity call for more time and greater delay for the consideration of the questions arising between the parties than under ordinary circumstances, inasmuch as States are incapable of acting with that promptness with which individuals may act.

Rhode Island vs. Massachusetts, 13 Pet., 23; 10 Law Ed., 41.

(6) The respondent most respectfully calls the attention of this court to the fact that the Virginia Debt Commission was created by a joint resolution passed by the Virginia Assembly in 1894 and approved March 6 of that year, and the act of 1900, approved March 6 of that year, and suggests that this commission is not authorized to institute the proceeding which it is now seeking to prosecute, as such a matter was not within the purview of the joint resolution of 1894 or the act of 1900; that is, such a proceeding was not contemplated at the time this commission was created and empowered to act. The joint resolution was simply one providing that the commission be > "authorized and directed to negotiate with the State of West Virginia an adjustment > of the proportion of the public debt of the original State of Virginia, proper to be borne by West Virginia."

From this it will be perceived that the resolution did not contemplate the bringing of any suit, but only amicable negotiations to be conducted by this commission on the part of Virginia with West Virginia to ascertain what proportion of the public debt should be borne by West Virginia.

The act of 1900 authorized the commission,

> "by and with the advice and approval of the Attorney General of Virginia to take such action and institute such proceedings on behalf of the State as may in the judgment of said commission, and the Attorney General, be needful and proper to protect the interests of the State, and bring about and carry into effect a settlement as aforesaid. All the expenses involved in connection with any of the matters aforesaid shall be borne by the certificate holders, as provided in the joint resolution aforesaid, and the State shall not be subjected to any expense on that account."

The settlement referred to above was to be made with West Virginia with respect to the certificates issued for that part of the debt not assumed by Virginia, and only upon the basis that

> "said commission shall in no event enter into any negotiations hereunder except upon the basis that Virginia is bound only for the two-thirds of the debt of the original > State, which she has already provided for as her equitable proportion thereof."

In pursuance of this authority the commission sent to the legislature of West Virginia that assembled in 1905 its representatives, and sought to obtain a settlement of the matter in controversy upon said basis. After this attempted negotiation on the part of the commission through its representatives, the Debt Commission reported the results thereof to the General Assembly of Virginia on January 9, 1906. Afterwards, with the approval of the Attorney General of Virginia, and the consent of the certificate holders, a suit was instituted in the name of Virginia to ascertain the proportion of the debt to be borne by West Virginia. After the various steps taken in the case and the cause submitted to the court for final determination of the matters in controversy, the court ascertained and fixed the proportion of the public debt to be borne by West Virginia at the sum specified in its decree, leaving the matter of interest undetermined, but upon a different basis than that upon which the commission was empowered to act.

This act of the court presented a new phase of the case and not one contemplated by either of the parties at any time before the institution of this suit or during its progress, and not contemplated by the commission or the legislature of Virginia when the commission was created and empowered to act. If this matter were brought to the attention of the legislature of Virginia in the present light of the situation, being now fully advised as to the effect of the opinion of the court with reference to the interests of Virginia, the General Assembly of that State would probably not insist upon further contending with West Virginia for interest, and would be satisfied with West Virginia's assumption of such amount as might be agreed upon between the two States acting in joint conference through a disinterested commission composed wholly of the citizens of the two States.

In view of these considerations it is respectfully submitted that the motion of the complainant ought not to prevail, and that no further action should be taken by this court until the legislature of West Virginia has had an opportunity in regular session to consider this case along the lines and in the spirit indicated by this court in its opinion announced on the 6th of March, 1911.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

"CONFERENCE COMMITTEE'S SUBSTITUTE FOR HOUSE SUBSTITUTE FOR SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION NO. 5.

(Adopted February 21, 1913)."

"Creating a commission, known as the Virginia debt commission, provide for arranging and settling with the Commonwealth of Virginia the proper proportion of the public debt of the original Commonwealth of Virginia, if any should be borne by West Virginia, to take into consideration all matters arising between the Commonwealth of Virginia and the State of West Virginia in reference to said original public debt, and to report its proceedings to the governor of the State.

"Whereas, the Commonwealth of Virginia instituted a suit in the Supreme Court of the United States against the State of West Virginia, to have the State of West Virginia's proportion of the public debt of Virginia as it stood before one thousand eight hundred and sixty-one, ascertained and satisfied; and,

"Whereas, at the October term, one thousand nine hundred and ten, the Supreme Court of the United States made a finding that the share of the principal debt of the original Commonwealth of Virginia to be borne by the State of West Virginia, was seven million one hundred and eighty-two thousand six hundred and seven dollars and forty-six cents; and,

"Whereas, said court did not fully and finally decide the question involved, but suggested that such proceedings and negotiations should be had between the States upon all the questions involved in said litigation, as might lead to a settlement of the same; therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of West Virginia, the House of Delegates concurring therein:

"That a commission of eleven members, known as the Virginia debt commission is hereby created. The members of said commission shall be appointed by the governor, two of whom shall be chosen from each congressional district of the State, and one at large, not more than six of whom shall belong to any one political party, and all resignations or vacancies in the said commission as they occur shall be filled by the appointment of the governor.

"Said commission is authorized and directed to negotiate with the Commonwealth of Virginia, or with any person or committee owning or holding any part of the said indebtedness for a settlement of West Virginia's proportion of the debt of the original Commonwealth of Virginia proper, to be borne by the State of West Virginia.

"The commission is hereby directed to ascertain and report upon and give the utmost publicity to all the facts in relation to the pending suit instituted against the State of West Virginia by the Commonwealth of Virginia and to ascertain and report upon and give like publicity of all of the facts and conditions under which the West Virginia certificates are held or owned, together with the names and residences of the persons having the legal or equitable right to receive from West Virginia whatever may be ascertained to be payable thereon.

"To ascertain and report as to any part of the Virginia debt claimed against the State of West Virginia, which is owned or held or claimed to be due, at law or in equity, by the Commonwealth of Virginia in her own right; and having made the investigation required hereby, said commission is authorized and directed to negotiate with the Commonwealth of Virginia for a settlement of West Virginia's proportion of the debt of the original Commonwealth of Virginia proper, to be borne by the State of West Virginia.

"A majority of said commission shall have authority to act. The commission shall choose its chairman and appoint its secretary and other necessary officers.

"The expense properly incurred by the commission and its individual members, including compensation of said members at the rate of ten dollars per day for the time actually employed, shall be paid by the State out of the moneys appropriated for said purpose.

"The commission shall make a report to the governor as soon as practicable, and upon receipt of said report the governor shall convene the legislature for the consideration of the same.

"The commission is hereby authorized to sit within or without the State and to send for papers and records and to examine witnesses under oath."

3. That pursuant to said joint resolution, the governor of West Virginia did appoint the eleven members of the debt commission therein provided for, and that on a later day the Honorable John W. Mason, of Fairmont, West Virginia, was chosen as the chairman of such commission. That after correspondence between Governor Hatfield, of West Virginia, and Governor Mann, of Virginia, filed herewith as "Exhibit A," the chairmen of the commissions of the two States arranged that the proposed joint conference between the States through their respective commissions, should be held at the New Willard Hotel, in the city of Washington, on the 25th day of July, 1913.

4. That on the day appointed the two commissions did meet in joint conference, and the proceedings of said joint conference, stenographically reported, were as shown in "Exhibit B" herewith filed as a part hereof, for the information of the court.

That said joint conference, after the foregoing proceedings were had, adjourned to meet at the same place on the 12th day of August, 1913. That on the 8th day of August the Honorable John W. Mason, chairman of the West Virginia Commission, notified the Honorable John B. Moon, chairman of the Virginia Debt Commission, by telegraph as follows, viz.:

"Fairmont, W. Va., August 8, 1913.

John B. Moon,

Charlottesville, Virginia.

Certain of our debt commission will not be ready for meeting Tuesday. Members have not had time enough for investigation. We meet at Charleston next Monday and would have to ask that time be extended to a day in the near future. Under these circumstances I suggest Washington meeting be now recalled.

(Signed) John W. Mason.

The notice and agreement for the meeting to be held on the 12th of August was accordingly recalled.

The Commonwealth of Virginia, in view of the recitals and facts herein stated and contained, respectfully moves the court that the cause be speeded so that a final decree may be made therein and this controversy brought to a close.

EXHIBIT "B"

Proceedings of a Joint Conference

BETWEEN THE

VIRGINIA DEBT COMMISSIONS

OF THE

STATES OF VIRGINIA AND WEST VIRGINIA

HELD AT

THE NEW WILLARD HOTEL

WASHINGTON, D. C.

July 25 and 26 1913

EXHIBIT B.

PROCEEDINGS OF A JOINT CONFERENCE BETWEEN THE VIRGINIA DEBT COMMISSIONS OF THE STATES OF VIRGINIA AND WEST VIRGINIA.

Washington, D. C., July 25, 1913,
New Willard Hotel.

The commissions of Virginia and West Virginia met at 11:30 o'clock A. M., pursuant to notice, Chairman Moon, of Virginia, and Chairman Mason, of West Virginia, presiding.

Chairman Moon: I have been instructed, gentlemen, to present to you, for your consideration, the following resolutions:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this commission that in the conference to be held this day with the West Virginia Commission, the subject for consideration and adjustment, as indicated by the court in its decision in this case, is the amount of interest which West Virginia should pay upon the sum ascertained by the court to be West Virginia's share of the principal of said debt.

2. This commission desiring to carry out in good faith the suggestions made by the Supreme court as to securing an amicable adjustment of the amount of interest which should be paid by West Virginia upon the principal of the debt as ascertained and decided by the court, and realizing that it is not the desire of Virginia nor was it the intention of the Supreme court that Virginia should ask or demand the full or legal amount of interest upon the principal debt as ascertained in the decision of the court, but that there should be concessions made upon both sides, such as comport with justice and the honor and dignity of the two States; and

Whereas, the joint conference to be held to-day between the commissions of Virginia and West Virginia was invited by the authorities of West Virginia, presumably for the purpose of carrying out in good faith the decision and suggestion of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Therefore, be it resolved, That this resolution, together with all other resolutions adopted by this commission at its present session, which may be pertinent, be presented by the chairman of this commission, to the commission of West Virginia at the joint conference to be held to-day, and that the commission of West Virginia be respectfully requested to communicate to this commission, what, in their judgment, would be a fair and just settlement of the interest to be paid by West Virginia upon the principal amount as ascertained in the opinion and decision of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Chairman Mason, of West Virginia: Referring to the resolutions which have just been presented to us on behalf of the commission of Virginia, I would say for the commission of West Virginia that it was not our expectation that this conference was to be confined to the consideration of only the question of interest. Our idea had been that the scope of the conference would be wider, and that we would confer together and take up the whole case, principal and interest. We thought that was what we were to meet here for.

It is my understanding that we, as commissioners, representing the two States, have the power to ascertain what is West Virginia's equitable proportion of the debt, if anything. I thought that was one of the things we were to get at, and try to reach a basis of settlement.

I do not feel that we should be confined solely to the consideration of the one question, namely, the question of interest.

Chairman Moon, of Virginia: I would say, gentlemen, that Mr. Randolph Harrison has been selected as spokesman for the Virginia commission, to present the matter to you as we view it, and I will now call on Mr. Harrison.

REMARKS OF MR. RANDOLPH HARRISON OF THE VIRGINIA COMMISSION.

Mr. Harrison: Mr. Chairman and gentlemen: The resolutions which have been presented to you for consideration by the chairman of the Virginia commission, contain a statement of what the Virginia commission conceives to be the question to be considered by the two commissions, and an expression of the spirit in which the Virginia commission enters upon this joint conference.

The first resolution declares it to be the sense of the Virginia commission that the subject before the two commissions for consideration and adjustment is, as indicated by the court in its decision, the amount of interest which West Virginia should pay upon the sum ascertained by the court to be West Virginia's share of the principal of the debt.

The second resolution assumes that the West Virginia commission has invited this conference for the purpose, and with the expectation, if possible, of carrying out in good faith the suggestion of the court in respect to an adjustment of the question of interest, and at the same time states that it is not the purpose of Virginia to exact, nor does this commission believe it to be the intent of the court that Virginia should exact the full amount of interest shown by the record to be due on the share of the principal of the debt ascertained by the court to be West Virginia's.

The Virginia commission enters upon this conference with you in a spirit of absolute frankness, and with the earnest desire to reach an adjustment of this unsettled question. To accomplish this result we recognize that there must be concessions made upon both sides, such as comport with justice and the honor and dignity of the two States. With that end in view we ask the West Virginia commission to advise what, in their opinion, would be a fair amount for West Virginia to pay in compromise and settlement of the amount of interest due on her share of the principal of the debt.

The chairman of the West Virginia commission has indicated that his commission did not expect this conference to be confined to the consideration of the question of interest alone; that a wider field of inquiry was in contemplation by that commission—a field which would involve a review of the merits of the case, and a determination of the amount of principal, as well as interest which, in the judgment of the West Virginia commission, should be paid by West Virginia.

I will, as briefly as I can, state what we conceive to be the object that the court had in view in suggesting this conference.

In its decision the court used this language: "We have given our decision with respect to the basis of liability, and the share of the principal of the debt of Virginia that West Virginia assumed."

It will be seen, therefore, that the basis of West Virginia's liability, and the share of the principal of the debt for which she is liable, are questions which have been removed from the realm of controversy, or of debate, or of further investigation; they have been judicially settled at the end of several years of litigation.

In this connection it is a pleasure for me to say that West Virginia has had the benefit in this case of able, industrious and zealous counsel, who have not lost an opportunity to present her side of it in the strongest aspect possible. One of these gentlemen I see here to-day, Mr. McClintic. I will venture to say that there is no man connected with this litigation more familiar with its details, and none of West Virginia's counsel has rendered more faithful or efficient service, than he.

You must bear in mind, gentlemen, that when the ground has been covered, as it has been, by able counsel, and the case heard by the highest court in the land, the questions settled by the decision of that court no longer remain open for dispute or investigation.

Continuing, the court said: "In any event, before we could put our judgment in the form of a final decree, there would be figures to be agreed upon, or to be ascertained by reference to a Master. Among other things there still remains the question of interest."

We have seen that "the basis of liability and the share of the principal of the debt that West Virginia assumed," are decided questions, but there were "other things" to be considered and settled by the court before it could put its judgment "in the form of a final decree," and among these other things is the question of interest, which question the court referred to the two States for adjustment, if an adjustment could be reached, the court stating that if the matter was pressed contentiously it would be referred to the Master, to make such calculations as might be necessary.

It has never been suggested to us before that West Virginia entertained the idea that it would be competent or proper for us to ignore the decision of the court and take jurisdiction of the entire subject matter and enter upon an investigation of the merits of the case.

Two years ago, in advance of the meeting of the West Virginia legislature in extra session, the Virginia commission laid before the governor of West Virginia the decision of the court, and requested that he would ask the legislature to appoint representatives to confer with us in regard to the question of interest, which had been referred to the two States by the court. The matter, however, was not dealt with by the legislature, and at the ensuing term of the court, in October, 1911, Virginia moved the court to speed the cause, on the ground that West Virginia had not indicated any purpose, or intention, to carry out the suggestion of the court. West Virginia, through her counsel, filed an answer to this petition, in which it was not once suggested that there was any misapprehension on the part of Virginia in respect to the question to be considered by the two States. But the contention of West Virginia, through her counsel, was that no action should be taken by the court until the legislature of West Virginia had an opportunity in regular session to consider the matter. Therefore, this is the first time, as I have already stated, that the suggestion has been made to any one representing Virginia, that West Virginia contemplated a reopening of the case and a consideration of the whole matter upon its merits. For the reasons that I have stated, gentlemen, the Virginia commission could not consent to this course. We cannot consent to go behind the decision of the court and take up and consider any question which has been decided by the court.

The resolutions which have been presented to you on the part of the Virginia commission embody its views in respect to the scope of this conference, and invite you to communicate to us what, in your opinion, would be a fair basis of settlement of the question of interest. I trust it will be the pleasure of the West Virginia commission to consider the matter in this aspect.

We also recognize the fact that it is competent for the two commissions to consider the question of settlement of the entire controversy, precisely as we might do if there were no other question pending before us, and, if it is the pleasure of the West Virginia commission to take up that question and communicate to the Virginia commission at this conference a proposition looking to a compromise settlement of the whole controversy, we will be glad to receive it, and will give it respectful and fair consideration.

Your chairman has indicated that the West Virginia commission, perhaps a majority of them, are not familiar with the details of this litigation, or the grounds upon which it has proceeded. It may be well enough for me, therefore, to say something in regard to the general subject, inasmuch as you may be viewing it from an angle that you would not view it from, if you were more fully advised.

The questions of West Virginia's liability for a just proportion of this debt, and the amount of that just proportion, were the questions considered by the court. West Virginia denied all liability, and denied the court's right to take jurisdiction of the case, but the court, after elaborate argument, overruled all of her objections. I know it is customary for West Virginians in referring to this case to say that the judgment of the court will amount to nothing, as there is no way of enforcing it. That question was urged before the court by West Virginia's counsel in the argument upon the demurrer, but the court, in referring to this subject in its opinion overruling the demurrer, said: "It is not to be presumed that West Virginia would refuse to carry out the decree of this court. If such repudiation should be absolutely asserted, we can then consider by what means the decree may be enforced."

I think we may safely assume that the court will consider the means of enforcing its decree, if it should ever reach that question, but the court evidently does not consider that result a possibility, as is clearly indicated by the language of the opinion, to the effect that the court will not "presume that West Virginia will refuse to carry out the decree of this court."

It is proper for me to say that no man connected with this litigation on Virginia's side, anticipates that any such stage of the proceedings will ever be reached. There is a power oftentimes more effective than courts to constrain, not only communities, but individuals, to do what is right, namely, the power of public opinion. Speaking for myself I can say that I have never entertained the thought that the State of West Virginia would deliberately repudiate a finding of the Supreme Court of the United States, because I do not believe the sentiment of her people would countenance any such course. Therefore, gentlemen, considerations which involve the repudiation by West Virginia of her liability in this case, have not influenced, and should not influence us in performing the duty now imposed upon us.

I do not think the people of West Virginia understand the nature of the obligation which rests upon them in respect to the liability of their State for a just proportion of this debt. They do not realize that this obligation was assumed in the first step taken towards the formation of the State of West Virginia, and was again assumed in her Constitution, adopted on the 26th of November, 1861, which not only bound the new State to bear a just proportion of the public debt of Virginia, but required her legislature to ascertain the same and provide for its payment. The State of Virginia (the restored State of Virginia) gave its consent by legislative enactment to the creation of the new State of West Virginia "under the provisions set forth in the constitution for the State of West Virginia." Those two instruments were laid before Congress, and on the faith of them Congress gave its consent to the admission of the new State into the Union. The court rests its decision in this case on the ground that West Virginia is bound by a solemn contract to bear a just proportion of this debt—a contract contained in her fundamental law, and to which Virginia and the Congress of the United States assented. The court, in considering that question, and basing her liability upon her solemn constitutional promise, made as a condition to her Statehood, said: "West Virginia must therefore be taken to have promised to pay to Virginia her share."

You must understand, gentlemen, that no State can be carved out of an existing State without the consent of the parent State, and in this case the consent of Virginia was given to the division of her territory on condition that West Virginia would bear a just proportion of her debt; and the consent of Congress was based upon the same condition. An eminent citizen of your State, who has wielded there the sceptre of power, made an argument in this case before the Master, in the course of which he took the ground that West Virginia made this promise because she knew she could not be admitted into the Union without it, and that it was made for the sole purpose of inducing Congress to admit her. In other words, that her promise was made to gain her political existence. The record in this case fully attests the accuracy of the statement that but for West Virginia's promise to assume a just proportion of the debt of Virginia, Congress would never have admitted her into the Union. Senator Sherman so stated in his correspondence with Senator Willey, and Senator Willey, who was an actor in those scenes and participated in the steps which led up to the formation of the State of West Virginia, made the following statement in his correspondence with Senator Sherman (all of which appears in the record): "I say to you now what I have said to the people of West Virginia, that but for that clause in her Constitution the State would never have been admitted. I say further, that in my opinion, no honest man or honest party in West Virginia, or out of it, will deny the obligation of West Virginia to pay an equitable part of the debt of Virginia."

You will hear it said in your State, because it has so often been said to me, gentlemen, "We do not owe any part of the debt because we did not get any of its benefits; none of the money was expended in West Virginia." That question is beside the mark. I will not stop now to consider it. It was settled by the court, and disposed of in the opinion of the court. But when the assertion is made that West Virginia derived no benefit from her promise to pay a just proportion of this debt, it should be remembered that at least she gained her political existence by it; that it was the price paid for Statehood.

Immediately after the war Virginia communicated to West Virginia a resolution, appealing to her to forget the past and to come back and be again a re-united Commonwealth. West Virginia lost no time in replying; she promptly answered that appeal with an emphatic "No." She preferred to remain an independent State, and was satisfied with the price she had paid for that privilege.

Do you think that the people of your State would continue in the belief that they do not owe any part of this debt if they understood these facts? Would they not take a different view of it if they were informed in respect to the basis of the liability of their State? If they understood that West Virginia had passed her word to bear a just proportion of this debt; that Virginia had given her consent to the separation on the faith of that promise, and that Congress, in reliance upon it, had admitted her into the Union, and that she was so well satisfied with the bargain that she refused the mother State's invitation after the war to re-unite with her, can there be any doubt that they would realize the obligation resting upon them, and feel that it was not creditable to keep it in the air, but that it was their duty to meet it like men, and settle it?

I firmly believe, gentlemen, that if men of courage and patriotism would inform the people of West Virginia of the real status of this issue, and of the ground upon which the liability of their State rests, that the majority of them, to say the least of it, would no longer seek to evade, or ignore it as something that did not concern them, but on the contrary they would insist on its being disposed of fairly and honestly. I really believe that their present attitude to the subject is due to the fact that they do not understand that there is a binding obligation upon the conscience of the people of West Virginia to perform her promise.

The court has said that "The liability of West Virginia is a deep-seated equity." Can you go back to your people and encourage in their minds the idea that they are under no obligation to respond to this liability which the court has said is founded in a deep-seated equity? The founders of West Virginia knew it was only just and right that, in dividing the territory of the mother Commonwealth, they should assume a part of the burden of this debt; they knew that they could not, in good conscience, deprive Virginia of a third of her territory and a third of her population and leave her to carry the burden of debt which they had helped to create. We have the authority of Senator Willey for the statement that the promise made by himself and his associates on behalf of West Virginia, to bear her share of that burden, was made in absolute good faith, and with the full intention of carrying it out. Can it be possible that your people, if they understood these facts, would tolerate any action that would ignore that liability, or temporize with it? Would they not meet the issue like honest men? I believe they would. I am a firm believer in the Jeffersonian faith in the people. I believe that when the people are rightly directed they will do what is right. I believe a majority of them are moved by correct impulses, and that when they go wrong it is because they are ignorant, or misinformed.

I have expressed these general views about this case in the hope that your commission, composed, as it is, of representative men of your State, will be the medium of influencing the people of West Virginia to do what is right in respect to this matter.

The position of West Virginia heretofore, as indicated by her public men, has been that she would not recognize any liability to Virginia for a share of this debt unless that liability was established by the court. Several years ago I had the pleasure of addressing the legislature of West Virginia on this question, with a view to bringing about a friendly adjustment and to avoid the necessity of taking the controversy into court. I urged upon your representatives at that time the propriety of taking action, and the importance of a friendly adjustment of the question. Numbers of your public men said to me at that time that while they recognized that it was important to settle the question, there was no use in talking to the people about it; that they had been educated to believe they did not owe anything, and that the only way to convince them was to let the court say what they owed. That has now been done. The highest court in the land has spoken, and in the light of the opinion of the court it is not open for any man to say that there is no obligation resting upon West Virginia; nor, in the light of that decision, is it open to any man to question the amount of the principal sum which she is obligated to pay.

The question of interest has been referred to us by the court for adjustment, if possible. We trust it will be your pleasure to take up that question with us and let us see whether it is possible to reach some conclusion that will be honorable to both States. We meet you in a hopeful spirit. No man can have any doubt about our earnest desire to reach a friendly adjustment of this controversy, and we are hopeful that such a body of men as we meet here to-day, will be the efficient instruments of bringing the people of their State to a just appreciation and recognition of her liability in this case.

We can not consent to open up the whole controversy, gentlemen, but we are ready to consider the question of interest. At least we can make an effort to adjust it. If the West Virginia commission desires to communicate to us a proposition to settle the whole controversy we will be glad to take up that question and consider it.

Chairman Mason, of West Virginia: What is the use of doing that, if you will not consider it?

Mr. Harrison: I say we will be glad to consider it.

Chairman Mason: But you say there is no authority to consider any question except that of interest. What is the use then of doing a vain thing?

Mr. Harrison: I hope it would not be a vain thing.

Chairman Mason: According to your statement it would, would it not?

Mr. Harrison: I cannot tell you in advance of a proposition. I say we will be glad to consider a proposition. If you see fit to submit a proposition as to a settlement of the whole controversy we will be glad to receive it. I stated that in the beginning.

I hope the West Virginia commission do not understand me as indicating it to be the sense of the Virginia commission, that we would not treat with you upon a settlement of the whole debt. We will be glad to do it. If the West Virginia commission has in mind negotiations along that line we will be glad to receive them, and will deal with them in the utmost spirit of frankness.

If that cannot be done; if West Virginia is not prepared to take up that question, then the only question open for us to consider is the question of interest. That is the only question referred to us by the court, as preliminary to further action by the court.

So many years have elapsed since this controversy has been pending that I hope, at least, we will come to some conclusion to-day; that we will either blaze the way to reach some result ourselves, or else make it apparent and clear that can not be done, so that the case may take its due course.

The Master's report contains in detail all of the data relating to the obligations put out by the original State of Virginia, upon which West Virginia is bound, and these are shown in detail, with the interest calculated thereon, in a green-covered pamphlet which is filed as an exhibit before the court. This pamphlet contains a list of all of the bonds taken from the Master's report, with the interest computed thereon, according to their tenor, upon the various bases of settlement that were then under consideration. The record furnishes complete data for the computation of the interest to be borne by West Virginia upon her share of the principal, as fixed by the court. It is not necessary, however, to go into any details about that at this time. The question before the West Virginia commission is the consideration of the two resolutions that we have communicated to them.

REMARKS OF MR. JOHN W. MASON, CHAIRMAN, WEST VIRGINIA COMMISSION.

Mr. Mason: Gentlemen, I want to say just a single word. I regret that the distinguished gentleman has seen fit to discuss the question, which he has, as to what West Virginia would do in case of judgment against us which we thought was a judgment from a court of competent jurisdiction. As to that we may say, as the Supreme Court said, if that contingency ever arises we will meet it, in a spirit that comports with the dignity of a great, loyal and law abiding State. We are not to be forced by any remarks in advance as to what is the equitable proportion, into giving an opinion of what we would do in case there is an adjustment.

Let me say a word as to another matter, if you will indulge a personal allusion. I am one of the men who voted for that constitution. I am one of the men who made that promise. It was my first vote. We made that promise. I, for one, have never had any inclination to, nor never thought of retracting it. But, for fifty years we have been asking, clamoring and demanding, trying in every way we knew how, to get at the question of what is our equitable proportion of that debt. Heretofore it has been newspaper correspondence and ex parte resolutions of legislatures, Virginia enacting such legislation as she saw proper, and West Virginia such legislation as she saw proper. After a while it got into the Supreme Court of the United States.

Now, gentlemen, I understood, and still understand, that it is to some extent at least before the commissioners representing the two States, who have the right and the power to ascertain and to answer the questions which I have been asking for fifty years, namely, what is West Virginia's equitable proportion of that debt, if anything?

I hope, gentlemen, you will not send us back to our constituents, saying we met a body with competent jurisdiction, authorized to answer that question, and you would not do it.

Instead you simply said that you would not discuss a compromise or talk with us but along one line. And we would go back home still with nothing except the finding of a court which, is my judgment, is not conclusive at all upon any subject except possibly the question as to the basis of settlement.

Congressman Flood: I think you entirely misunderstood Mr. Harrison. He distinctly stated at the beginning that the Virginia commission would be glad to receive a communication from you.

Mr. Mason: Yes, but that is as to the resolution, and the only question is the question of interest.

Mr. Harrison: As indicated by the court.

Congressman Flood: Mr. Harrison indicated that the Virginia commission was prepared, in response to some resolution that you might adopt, to go further.

Mr. Mason: Let me say this. If you mean by that, that the West Virginia commission, organized as it is, with only limited advisory power, recently appointed, without having opportunity to go over the question, is to formulate a proposition, not upon the principal, but upon the amounts, as to how the account stands between the two parties, whether we owe you anything or you owe us, and if so how much, of course we would not be prepared to do that at this time.

Chairman Moon, of Virginia: When would you be prepared to render a statement of that kind?

Mr. Mason: My idea, gentlemen, is that this is, to a very large extent, a matter of compromise between the two commissions. We want to meet in that light. We do not want to meet as if still carrying on a lawsuit. We can carry that on any time we want to. But we are here representing the litigants on the two sides, and we can agree, if we can agree at all, on a basis of settlement. And, further, after we know what that is, we may agree upon amounts.

Simply to say now that we will not talk about or discuss anything except the question of interest, why gentlemen, you place us in a very embarrassing position. I am sure you do not want to do that.

Mr. Moon: That is our view of the situation, but we would be glad to receive your counter suggestions, and have you state your views.

Mr. Mason: If you mean by that, gentlemen, to get down to the concrete and say, "West Virginia will pay you so much money," or, "Virginia owes us so much money," as to that we already have had two statements of that account in West Virginia. One statement brings West Virginia out a little in debt. The gentleman who made that statement, the principal man who made that report, was the old auditor of Virginia for eight years. Since that report there is another statement which says you owe us. So if you want to go into the concrete and say how the amount stands, gentlemen, we would ask you for further conference upon the matter. But if you want to insist simply that you are not going to talk about anything else, and consider nothing else but interest, the probabilities are that we could settle that question in a very short time. I hope that will not be the view of this commission.

Mr. Moon: Do you suppose that in thirty days you could formulate a suggestion?

Mr. Wells, (of West Virginia): I was about to make this suggestion, that we adjourn until 2 o'clock, for luncheon; that at that hour the West Virginia commission to meet to formulate its reply to the resolutions offered by the Virginia commission, and that the Virginia commission remain subject to our call, until we are ready to submit our reply.

Mr. Mason: Maybe I ought not to do this; if I ought not, pardon me. Suppose you withdraw this resolution, gentlemen, and let us meet as friends; and see whether or not we can settle this question, whether or not, Mr. Harrison, you can answer the questions that I have been propounding, as you and some other people know, in the last forty years, as to what is West Virginia's equitable proportion of the debt.

Mr. Moon: Our view is that the court has answered that question as to principal.

Mr. Mason: I do not want to take up the technical question, that has been settled, especially in view of what the court said upon that subject.

Mr. Harrison: Our view is that the court has answered that vexed question as to the principal.

Mr. Mason: As to the principal?

Mr. Harrison: Yes, as to the principal.

Mr. Mason: The basis, you mean?

Mr. Harrison: Yes, and as to the amount, subject perhaps to any revision of figures that may be necessary. The very tribunal has answered the question which the public men of your State desired should answer it, rather than to have that responsibility upon them.

Mr. Mason: We do not understand the Supreme Court decision or opinion in that light. We do not consider at all that the Supreme Court has settled the amount. It has indicated a basis. It took a different one from yours or ours, either one. You suggested it upon the basis of population, and ours was upon taking the Wheeling ordinance. They said both were wrong, and in their report took the taxable values.

Mr. Harrison: Of course alternative bases were presented to the court.

Mr. Mason: Yes.

Mr. Harrison: But they adopted a basis by which they thought the fairest results would be attained, and on that basis have expressed an opinion as to the amount.

Mr. Mason: Yes, I say that, too.

Mr. Harrison: Now do not misunderstand me, if you please, Mr. Chairman, to indicate that it is the sense of the Virginia commission not to meet you gentlemen in the utmost spirit of frankness and consider the question of settling the whole controversy.

Mr. Mason: Suppose we just simply answer your first resolution no; there probably would be no answer to the second one, because nobody is going to say we want to put ourselves in opposition to the Supreme Court of the United States or any other court.

Mr. Moon: Which do you mean by the first one?

Mr. Mason: The one which says the only question is the matter of interest. That would be easily answered. As to the other, of course, gentlemen, you do not want to put us in that position and have us say we would place ourselves in opposition to the judgment or decree of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. Harrison: Let me make this suggestion. I hope in the response your commission will make to the resolution, that if you think other questions than interest have been referred by the court to the two commissions for consideration, you gentlemen will kindly indicate what they are, in order that we may understand each other.

Mr. Mason: But, Mr. Harrison, we probably would not be ready now to go over and indicate the items which have been omitted. In order to make a settlement upon the basis suggested by the Supreme Court of course there are two things to be considered. One is the taxable value of the property of the two States. And they have omitted the slave property. The other is the actual amount of the debt.

Mr. Harrison: I suggest you put that in the form of a reply.

Mr. Mason: That may not be the only question, gentlemen.

Mr. Moon: I believe the suggestion has been made by Mr. Wells, which I think a wise suggestion, that we take an adjournment now until 2 o'clock and await the pleasure of the West Virginia commission, so far as we are concerned. You can notify us when you are ready to continue the conference.

(Thereupon, at 12:30 o'clock P. M., the joint conference was adjourned, subject to the call of the West Virginia commission.)

Conference Room of the Virginia Commission,
New Willard Hotel, Washington, D. C.,
5 o'clock, P. M.

At 5 o'clock, P. M., Chairman Mason, of the West Virginia commission, appeared before the Virginia commission and presented the following resolutions, which had been adopted by the West Virginia commission in reply to the resolutions presented to it in joint conference:

1. The debt commission on the part of the State of West Virginia having this day been handed the following resolution adopted by the debt commission on the part of the State of Virginia:

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this commission that in the conference to be held this day with the West Virginia commission, the subject for consideration and adjustment, as indicated by the court in its decision in this case, is the amount of interest which West Virginia should pay upon the sum ascertained by the court to be West Virginia's share of the principal of said debt."

In reply thereto says: that in its judgment the interest, if any, which should be paid to the State of Virginia as stated in the foregoing resolution, is not the only question, as indicated by the language used by the Supreme Court of the United States in its opinion, which the joint commission, now in session, should consider.

2. Whereas, the view of the Virginia debt commission on the part of West Virginia is that the present conference is for a preliminary discussion and exchange of views and for the added purpose of arranging a method for a more complete consideration of the matters involved, and adjusting a working programme; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Virginia and West Virginia commissions shall each appoint a sub-committee, respectively, of three members, with instructions to confer at the earliest convenient time and place and to thoroughly discuss all matters involved, and endeavor to reach a final proposition that shall be submitted back to the two respective commissions, separately, for consideration by each, and for final determination at a joint conference to be subsequently arranged between the chairmen of the two committees; but nothing herein contained shall prejudice the rights of either party.

After consideration of the above resolutions by the Virginia commission, Chairman Moon and the members of the Virginia commission proceeded to the conference room of the West Virginia commission.

Conference Room, West Virginia Commission,
New Willard Hotel, Washington, D. C.,
8 o'clock, P. M.

Chairman Moon, of Virginia: Gentlemen of the West Virginia commission, the Virginia commission has adopted the following resolutions in response to your resolutions of this afternoon:

The Virginia commission, having received the following communications from the West Virginia commission, numbered for convenience 1 and 2:

(1) The debt commission on the part of the State of West Virginia having this day been handed the following resolution adopted by the debt commission on the part of the State of Virginia:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this commission that in the conference to be held this day with the West Virginia commission, the subject for consideration and adjustment, as indicated by the court in its decision in this case, is the amount of interest which West Virginia should pay upon the sum ascertained by the court to be West Virginia's share of the principal of said debt.

In reply thereto says: That in its judgment the interest, if any, which should be paid to the State of Virginia as stated in the foregoing resolution, is not the only question, as indicated by the language used by the Supreme Court of the United States in its opinion, which the joint commission, now in session, should consider.

(2) Whereas, the view of the Virginia debt commission on the part of West Virginia is that the present conference is for a preliminary discussion and exchange of views and for the added purpose of arranging a method for a more complete consideration of the matters involved, and adjusting a working programme; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Virginia and West Virginia commissions shall each appoint a sub-committee, respectively, of three members, with instructions to confer at the earliest convenient time and place and to thoroughly discuss all matters involved, and endeavor to reach a final proposition that shall be submitted back to the two respective commissions, separately, for consideration by each, and for final determination at a joint conference to be subsequently arranged between the chairmen of the two committees; but nothing herein contained shall prejudice the rights of either party.

Respectfully replies that in its judgment the language of the Supreme Court does not admit of the foregoing construction to the effect that "the interest, if any, is not the only question" which the joint conference should consider.

The court said: "Among other things there still remains the question of interest." The Virginia commission understands this language to mean that there were "other things" to be considered by the court before it reached a final decree, and that among these other things the only one referred to the two States for adjustment was the question of interest.

The Virginia commission, being of opinion that there is no ambiguity in the opinion of the court, and that no conference as to any other matter than the question of interest is called for between the two commissions, respectfully adheres to the interpretation of the opinion and decision of the court as expressed in its prior communication of this date, and as elaborated in the remarks of Mr. Randolph Harrison, before the joint session of the two commissions.

It regrets, however, that the West Virginia commission has not indicated, as they were requested to do, what questions other than the question of interest should be, in their judgment, considered by the two States.

The Virginia commission further regrets that the West Virginia commission has not seen fit to indicate or suggest an amount, the payment of which they would recommend as a final compromise and adjustment of the proportion of the debt to be borne by West Virginia, as the Virginia commission specifically declared, through Mr. Harrison, that such proposal would receive most careful and respectful consideration, if the West Virginia commission saw fit to take up that subject.

Now, responding to the proposal of the West Virginia commission that a sub-committee of three should be formed from each commission, with instructions to consider all matters involved, and so forth, the Virginia commission respectfully says that it is agreeable to the appointment of such sub-committees, provided the matters to be considered by them are as indicated above, namely:

(1) The amount of interest which West Virginia should pay upon the sum ascertained by the court in its decision to be West Virginia's share of the principal of the debt.

(2) Any proposal which West Virginia may deem proper to submit for the final compromise settlement of the proportion of the debt to be borne by West Virginia.

Provided, further, that said sub-committees be directed to meet on the ..... day of ....., 1913, and report to an adjourned meeting of this joint conference to be held on the ..... day of ....., 1913.

Chairman Moon, of Virginia: I presume it is intended that the meeting of the sub-committees referred to, be held at this place; I do not know.

Chairman Mason, of West Virginia: I take it, gentlemen, that is only a qualified acceptance of the proposition made by us, and that we would want to discuss it further. Whether or not we would want to eliminate from the report to be made by the sub-committees, all questions except the payment of interest, and further, that the proposal of a basis for payment shall come from West Virginia, are questions that we would wish to consider.

I had hoped, gentlemen, you would feel free simply to leave the question open, and that the sub-committee when it met might discuss matters and make such report as it thought proper, insisting, of course, upon your notion about it.

Whether or not we would want to appoint a committee under those restrictions is a matter we would have to think about. I regret very much that you limit it in that way.

Chairman Moon, of Virginia: Would you suggest a separate session of your commission to consider that point?

Chairman Mason, of West Virginia: Yes. I think it will take but a few moments' time.

Chairman Moon, of Virginia: So we will leave you in executive session until you determine what position you will take upon that point.

Chairman Mason, of West Virginia: Yes. I am sorry, gentlemen, you put it in that way.

Conference Room of the Virginia Commission,
New Willard Hotel, Washington, D. C.,
9:30 o'clock, P. M.

Chairman Mason, of the West Virginia commission, appeared before the Virginia commission, and the following occurred:

Chairman Mason, of West Virginia: Gentlemen, the West Virginia commission elects me to report the following:

The West Virginia commission has received the following statement from the Virginia debt commission:

The Virginia commission, having received the following communications from the West Virginia commission, numbered for convenience 1 and 2:

(1) The debt commission on the part of the State of West Virginia having this day been handed the following resolution adopted by the debt commission on the part of the State of Virginia:

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this commission that in the conference to be held this day with the West Virginia commission, the subject for consideration and adjustment, as indicated by the court in its decision in this case, is the amount of interest which West Virginia should pay upon the sum ascertained by the court to be West Virginia's share of the principal of said debt."

In reply thereto says: That in its judgment the interest, if any, which should be paid to the State of Virginia as stated in the foregoing resolution, is not the only question, as indicated by the language used by the Supreme Court of the United States in its opinion, which the joint commission, now in session, should consider.

(2) Whereas, the view of the Virginia debt commission on the part of West Virginia is that the present conference is for a preliminary discussion and exchange of views and for the added purpose of arranging a method for a more complete consideration of the matters involved, and adjusting a working programme; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Virginia and West Virginia commissions shall each appoint a sub-committee, of three members, with instructions to confer at the earliest convenient time and place and to thoroughly discuss all matters involved, and endeavor to reach a final proposition that shall be submitted back to the two respective commissions, separately, for consideration by each, and for final determination at a joint conference to be subsequently arranged between the chairmen of the two committees; but nothing herein contained shall prejudice the rights of either party.

Respectfully replies that in its judgment the language of the Supreme Court does not admit of the foregoing construction to the effect that "the interest, if any, is not the only question," which the joint conference should consider.

The court said: "Among other things there still remains the question of interest." The Virginia commission understands this language to mean that there were "other things" to be considered by the court before it reached a final decree, and that among these other things the only one referred to the two States for adjustment was the question of interest.

The Virginia commission, being of opinion that there is no ambiguity in the opinion of the court, and that no conference as to any other matter than the question of interest is called for between the two commissions, respectfully adheres to the interpretation of the opinion and decision of the court, as expressed in its prior communication of this date, and as elaborated in the remarks of Mr. Randolph Harrison, before the joint session of the two commissions.

It regrets, however, that the West Virginia commission has not indicated, as they were requested to do, what questions other than the question of interest should be, in their judgment, considered by the two States.

The Virginia commission further regrets that the West Virginia commission has not seen fit to indicate or suggest an amount the payment of which they would recommend as a final compromise and adjustment of the proportion of the debt to be borne by West Virginia, as the Virginia commission specifically declared, through Mr. Harrison, that such proposal would receive most careful and respectful consideration, if the West Virginia commission saw fit to take up that subject.

Now, responding to the proposal of the West Virginia commission that a sub-committee of three should be formed from each commission, with instructions to consider all matters involved, and so forth, the Virginia commission respectfully says that it is agreeable to the appointment of such sub-committees, provided the matters to be considered by them are as indicated above, namely:

(1) The amount of interest which West Virginia should pay upon the sum ascertained by the court in its decision to be West Virginia's share of the principal of the debt.

(2) Any proposal which West Virginia may deem proper to submit for the final compromise settlement of the proportion of the debt to be borne by West Virginia.

Provided, further, that said sub-committees be directed to meet on the ..... days of ....., 1913, and report to an adjourned meeting of this joint conference to be held on the ..... day of ....., 1913.

And in reply to the last communication of the Virginia debt commission, the West Virginia debt commission says that it is anxious to proceed with the negotiations but cannot consent to agree in advance that only the question of interest shall be considered, or that the West Virginia sub-committee shall be required to first submit a proposition looking to a settlement. This commission is willing and anxious to approach a settlement upon equal terms, leaving, in the first instance, all questions of procedure to the said sub-committees.

This committee did not understand the remarks made by Mr. Harrison to-day as a proposition. We considered only the written resolutions presented to us.

In reply to the remarks made by Mr. Harrison at the joint meeting to-day, and referred to in your communication, we would say that this commission does not feel sufficiently acquainted with the questions involved—for reasons heretofore stated—to submit a proposition at this time, and asks that the whole subject matter be submitted to the sub-committees hereinbefore referred to, with the understanding that the said sub-committees be required to report their action for approval to their respective commissions at a time in the near future to be now agreed upon.

Chairman Moon, of Virginia: What do we understand by "the whole matter"?

Chairman Mason, of West Virginia: Interest and all; everything to go to the sub-committee; and let it thresh it out, and let it make its report:

Mr. Harrison, of Virginia: You mean to reopen the whole case and consider the questions de novo? That is what you mean by "the whole matter," I suppose.

Chairman Mason, of West Virginia: That is our view. That is, we do not mean to go back to the courts, or to the commissioners; but we would consider among ourselves, that is, the sub-committee, and discuss the whole matter.

Mr. Flood, of Virginia: All other matters, as well as interest?

Chairman Mason, of West Virginia: All other matters, as well as interest; yes, sir. I do not mean, of course, to have this go back to the courts, or the commissioners, necessarily; but so far as we are concerned, in discussing and settling the matter, we want the whole question considered. We are not willing to say in advance that there is no question involved but interest.

Chairman Moon, of Virginia: Do not you misquote us in stating that we ask the proposition in advance? We do not ask it in advance, do we?

Chairman Mason, of West Virginia: No; I say it is not of very much interest who makes the first proposition of settlement, but you say that the sub-committee shall first make the proposition of settlement. Our idea is to leave that question of procedure to the sub-committees. It makes no difference which has the first say or which has the last say. We might make it a low figure, practically nothing, and then simply negotiate. It is our idea of procedure.

Chairman Moon, of Virginia: The impression made on my mind on hearing the resolution read, was that you intended to convey the idea that we required you first to make a proposition for compromise in settlement of the whole matter, to us. Is that what you intend to convey?

Chairman Mason, of West Virginia: Yes; that is the way we understood your second proposition.

Chairman Moon, of Virginia: The second proposition, not the first one.

Chairman Mason, of West Virginia: I say, your number two, in the last proposition.

Mr. Flood, of Virginia: Your objection to our second proposition is that we require first a suggestion of compromise to come from your sub-committee?

Chairman Mason, of West Virginia: Yes. We suggest now that that is a question of procedure and should be left open to the sub-committee; to leave it as a question of procedure.

Chairman Moon, of Virginia: To be entirely frank with you, it seems to me this morning this was made plain, that the court gave the principals, and that we presented the details upon which the interest might be computed, according to rules of interstate or international law, by which an accurate statement could be made up of the interest. That subject we do not expect to be considered, except as a whole.

And we invited some proposition from you gentlemen as to a settlement of the matter, inasmuch as the Supreme Court has discussed the matter and left it open, to a certain extent.

Chairman Mason, of West Virginia: I understand your view is that the Supreme Court has settled the question of amount. We do not look at it alike.

Chairman Moon, of Virginia. No, the amount of the principal.

Chairman Mason, of West Virginia: I say, the amount of the principal. We do not look at it that way. We want the whole matter to be taken up by the sub-committees, to see just what we ought to pay, if anything. Then it will come back to us in that shape. Our committee would not be willing to concede the fact that the only thing to be agreed upon was the question of interest.

Mr. Harrison, of Virginia: You mean, by "the whole subject matter," to reopen the whole case and consider the matters de novo?

Chairman Mason, of West Virginia: Yes, sir; that is as far as the commissions are concerned.

(After careful consideration of the above resolutions, a resolution in reply was adopted, and Chairman Moon proceeded to the conference room of the West Virginia commission, where the following occurred:

Conference Room of the West Virginia Commission,
New Willard Hotel, Washington, D. C.,
11:15 o'clock, P. M.

Chairman Moon, of Virginia: The Virginia commission has instructed me to give you the following communication:

The Virginia commission has given careful consideration to the last communication from the West Virginia commission stating in effect that the conference between the two commssions must embrace a consideration de novo of the entire case, both as to principal and interest involved.

The Virginia commission for reasons heretofore repeatedly stated feels constrained to decline the terms proposed by the West Virginia commission as the basis upon which the conference must proceed.

Chairman Mason, of West Virginia: That being true, are we through?

Chairman Moon, of Virginia: I do not know. You gentlemen can consider that matter. I have no authority to speak for the Virginia commission except to deliver that message. We give that to you for your consideration.

Chairman Mason: We made you a proposition.

Chairman Moon, of Virginia: Yes, I know; but I have no authority beyond that paper.

Chairman Mason, of West Virginia: If you have reached that conclusion, it is not necessary for us to continue our negotiations for the present.

Chairman Moon, of Virginia: That is for you to say.

Chairman Mason, of West Virginia: No, that is not for us. We have said we could not do the other; you say you can not do this.

Chairman Moon, of Virginia: We say that we feel constrained to decline to continue negotiations upon the basis which you propose.

Chairman Mason, of West Virginia: Yes.

Chairman Moon, of Virginia: Now, the question is, what the basis is.

Chairman Mason, of West Virginia: The basis is, as I understand it, that you will insist upon your contention that the only question to be considered is the question of interest.

Chairman Moon, of Virginia: Oh, no. It is all set forth at length in our communications. I am not undertaking to speak for the Virginia commission in this respect.

Chairman Mason, of West Virginia: I do not understand just what shape that leaves us in. If it is simply to stop any further negotiations about it, we might as well do it at one time as another.

Chairman Moon, of Virginia: I did not write that resolution. It was drawn by the members of the Virginia commission, and they have passed it. I have no authority except to deliver it to you for your consideration. We regret very much that negotiations can not proceed on a different basis; that is all.

Chairman Mason, of West Virginia: So do we. But let us remain in session for a few minutes, and we will see whether we will quit, or not.

Chairman Moon, of Virginia: Certainly.

Conference Room of the Virginia Commission,
New Willard Hotel, Washington, D. C.,
12:05 o'clock, Midnight.

Chairman Mason, of the West Virginia commission appeared before the Virginia commission, and presented the following resolution:

The following communication was received from the Virginia commission after 11 o'clock P. M.

The Virginia commission has given careful consideration to the last communication from the West Virginia commission, stating, in effect, that the conference between the two commissions must embrace a consideration de novo of the entire case, both as to the principal and interest involved.

The Virginia commission for reasons heretofore repeatedly stated feels constrained to decline the terms proposed by the West Virginia commission as the basis upon which the conference must proceed.

Pending a consideration of the communication Mr. Miller moved that owing to the lateness of the hour at which the communication was received, the further consideration of the same be postponed until to-morrow morning, July 26, 1913, at 10 o'clock and that the West Virginia commission adjourn until that hour.

Which motion was put by the chair and carried by the unanimous vote of the commission, at 12 o'clock midnight.

(In pursuance of the above resolution, further proceedings were adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, July 26, 1913, at 10 o'clock A. M.)

Saturday, July 26, 1913.
Conference Room of the Virginia Commission,
11:40 o'clock A. M.

Chairman Mason, of West Virginia, appeared before the Virginia commission and presented the following resolution:

The Virginia debt commission on the part of the State of West Virginia received at 11:15 last night the following communication from the Virginia commission:

The Virginia commission has given careful consideration to the last communication from the West Virginia commission, stating, in effect, that the conference between the two commissions must embrace a consideration de novo of the entire case, both as to the principal and interest involved.

The Virginia commission for reasons heretofore repeatedly stated feels constrained to decline the terms proposed by the West Virginia commission as the basis upon which the conference must proceed.

In reply to the foregoing communication the West Virginia commission regrets that the Virginia commission has declined to submit the matters in question to a sub-committee.

as heretofore proposed by the West Virginia commission, and the West Virginia commission now suggests that the two commissions have a joint meeting on the ..... day of ....., at ....., for the purpose of further considering a settlement of West Virginia's proportion, if any, of the Virginia debt proper to be borne by the State of West Virginia and to arrive, if possible, at some adjustment thereof.

(The above resolutions were considered by the Virginia commission, a reply adopted, and Chairman Moon proceeded to the conference room of the West Virginia commission to present the same.)

Conference Room of the West Virginia Commission.
New Willard Hotel,
12:30 o'clock, P. M.

Chairman Moon, of Virginia: I am instructed by the Virginia commission to present to you the following communication:

The Virginia commission have considered the suggestion of the West Virginia commission for an adjournment of the conference between the two commissions.

If it is the purpose of the West Virginia commission to insist that the joint conference shall embrace a consideration de novo of the entire case, both as to principal and interest involved, then the Virginia commission can perceive no advantage to result from further negotiations. The Virginia commission cannot recede from their views as heretofore announced to the West Virginia commission in respect to the matters to be embraced in the conference between the two commissions.

With this understanding it consents to the adjournment of the conference to Tuesday, August 12, 1913, at 10 o'clock A. M., at the New Willard Hotel, Washington.

Conference Room of the Virginia Commission,
New Willard Hotel,
3:00 o'clock, P. M.

Chairman Mason, of the West Virginia Commission, appeared before the Virginia commission and presented the following resolution:

The West Virginia commission acknowledge receipt of the communication from the Virginia commission concurring in the suggested adjournment upon certain terms and conditions, which terms and conditions the West Virginia commission declines to be bound by. We, however, agree to the time and place of adjournment suggested by you and insist that this adjournment shall be, and is, without terms or conditions and without prejudice to the rights of either party.

(After an informal discussion, the conference at 3:30 o'clock P. M., adjourned to meet on Tuesday, August 12, 1913, at 10 o'clock A. M., at the New Willard Hotel, Washington, D. C.)

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.

OCTOBER TERM, 1913.

No. 2, Original.

COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA,
COMPLAINANT,

vs.

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA, DEFENDANT.

IN EQUITY.

NOTE OF ARGUMENT IN RESISTANCE OF COMPLAINANT'S MOTION THAT THE COURT PROCEED TO ADJUDICATE ALL UNDECIDED QUESTIONS IN THE CAUSE.

It is respectfully submitted that there are but two questions for consideration in the determination and decision of this motion. They are:

I. Is the West Virginia Commission making a present effort in good faith to negotiate a settlement of West Virginia's equitable portion of the Virginia debt in accordance with the suggestion of this court? And,

II. If there be a present and sincere effort to that end on the part of the West Virginia Commission, does the fact that it is under the necessity of reporting back to the governor and legislature of the State of West Virginia the result of its negotiations emasculate the Commission and render its negotiations a mere idle and empty form?

The first question must be answered yes and the second no, and we shall undertake to briefly give the reasons therefor.

I.

ACTIVITY AND GOOD FAITH OF WEST VIRGINIA COMMISSION.

The response filed to the motion herein, together with the exhibits therewith, shows that the West Virginia Commission has not ceased its activities from the time of its organization, on the tenth day of June, 1913, to the present time, and that it is still active along the line of negotiation, notwithstanding the pendency of the present motion. Indeed, upon the very day that this motion bears date and before notice thereof had been served upon the State of West Virginia, the chairman of the West Virginia Commission, in consequence of a resolution adopted by a sub-committee thereof, mailed a letter to the chairman of the Virginia Commission, informing him, and requesting him to so inform the Virginia Commission, "that the West Virginia Commission has in course of preparation a proposition (looking to a settlement) to be presented to your Commission at the earliest moment." The full text of this letter is as follows:

"FAIRMONT, WEST VIRGINIA,
September 22, 1913.

"Honorable J. B. MOON,
"Chairman Virginia Debt Commission, Charlottesville, Virginia.

"MY DEAR SIR: I am instructed by a sub-committee of the West Virginia Commission, appointed by the Governor of that State to negotiate a settlement, in accordance with the suggestions of the Supreme Court of the United States, of the controversy between the States of Virginia and West Virginia relative to the settlement of the Virginia debt, to say to you, and through you to the Virginia Commission, that the West Virginia Commission has in course of preparation a proposition (looking to a settlement) to be presented to your Commission at the earliest moment; but that it will yet require some three or four months' time in which to put said proposition in final and intelligent form. I cordially endorse the recommendation of the sub-committee, and hope it will be agreeable to your Commission to consider the same favorably.

"In the meantime, if your Commission should desire to submit any suggestions or propositions to this Commission, looking to the same end, we would gladly, and without unnecessary delay, consider the same.

"With great respect, I remain,

"Yours, etc.,

"JOHN W. MASON,

"Chairman West Virginia Commission."

It likewise appears from the response to the motion that—

> "While its Commission" (the West Virginia Commission) "and the sub-committee thereof, together with the Governor and Attorney General of the State, were diligently and conscientiously using every effort which they reasonably could use, and while they were exercising due diligence and were proceeding with all deliberate speed to carry into execution the requirements imposed upon them by the joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of West Virginia of February 21, 1913, and while they were formulating a proposition to be made to the Virginia Commission, as requested by said Commission at the Washington conference hereinbefore referred to, to the end that the matters in controversy between the two States might be settled in accordance with the suggestion of this honorable court, made in its opinion rendered March 6, 1911, as interpreted by its opinion rendered October 30, 1911, the Commonwealth of Virginia served notice of the present motion." Par. 12 of Response.

These are the words of the State, spoken through its chief law officer, its Attorney General, and the sincerity and truth thereof, we presume, will be conceded.

Nor is this all: The West Virginia Commission has not only been active and earnest, but the exhibits filed with the response show progress in the negotiations. At the joint conference of the Commissions of the two States, held at Washington on the 25th and 26th days of July, 1913, the State of Virginia had no proposition to make, and made none. At first, it contented itself with presenting to the West Virginia Commission a resolution declaring that the negotiations must be confined to the single question of interest; but, upon the demurrer of the West Virginia Commission, finally invited a proposition from that Commission looking to a settlement of the entire matter. This, we presume, meant a lump sum; but the West Virginia Commission, feeling that it was not sufficiently informed at that time to take such a step, declined to make any proposition. Thereupon, the joint session adjourned. Subsequently, however, the West Virginia Commission, after the appointment of a sub-committee, and after some consideration by that committee of the question, began the preparation of a proposition to be submitted to the Virginia Commission. This is evidenced by the letter of its chairman of the 22d of September, 1913, hereinbefore set forth; and it is submitted that this shows progress. It may not be as rapid as the Virginia Commission would like, but it must be borne in mind that the latter Commission occupies a very different position from the former. The Virginia Commission has nothing to do but to receive, while the West Virginia Commission may be required to provide and to pay.

II.

EFFECT OF REFERRING RESULT OF NEGOTIATIONS BACK TO THE LEGISLATURE OF WEST VIRGINIA.

The fact that the West Virginia Commission is required by the resolution of its appointment to report, without further action, the result of its negotiations to the governor of that State does not destroy the utility of the Commission; because it would have been necessary to make this report in any event, whatever might have been the form of the resolution. Even if the two Commissions should agree upon a fixed sum in settlement, the West Virginia Commission would have no power to pay the same under the West Virginia Constitution, whatever the terms of the resolution appointing it. It could not draw its warrant upon the treasury of the State, nor could that power be delegated to it; and, even if it should, a probable lack of funds would render its draft worthless. Neither could it, nor any of the officials of the State, in the absence of legislative sanction, issue bonds for the purpose of raising money for the discharge of the decree agreed; and for it, or them, to do so would simply result in putting worthless securities upon the market.

Section 3 of article 10 of the present Constitution of West Virginia (1872) reads as follows:

> "3. No money shall be drawn from the treasury but in pursuance of an appropriation made by law, and on a warrant issued thereon by the auditor; nor shall any money or fund be taken for any other purpose than that for which it has been or may be appropriated, or provided. A complete and detailed statement of the receipts and expenditures of the public moneys shall be published annually."

And section 4 of the same article reads:

> "4. No debt shall be contracted by this State, except to meet casual deficits in the revenue, to redeem a previous liability of the State, to suppress insurrection, repel invasion or defend the State in time of war; but the payment of any liability other than that for the ordinary expenses of the State shall be equally distributed over a period of at least twenty years."

See also section 5 of the same article:

> "The power of taxation of the legislature shall extend to provisions for the payment of the State debt and interest thereon, the support of free schools, and the payment of the annual estimated expenses of the State; but, whenever any deficiency in the revenue shall exist in any year, it shall, at the regular session thereof held next after the deficiency occurs, levy a tax for the ensuing year sufficient with the other sources of income to meet such deficiency, as well as the estimated expenses of such year."

But if it should be contended that the provisions of the present Constitution are not to govern, but that section 8 of article 8 of the Constitution of 1861, as being a part of the contract between the two States, should be looked to, then we find it reading as follows:

> "8. An equitable proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia, prior to the first day of January, in the year one thousand eight hundred and sixty-one, shall be assumed by this State; and the legislature shall ascertain the same as soon as may be practicable, and provide for the liquidation thereof by a sinking fund sufficient to pay the accruing interest, and redeem the principal within thirty-four years."

In any event, and under either Constitution, moneys can be drawn from the State treasury in only one way; and, wherever a debt is to be created (as by a bond issue) under section 4 of article 10 of the present Constitution, the payment thereof "shall be equally distributed over a period of at least twenty years," and under section 8 of article 8 of the Constitution of 1861 could be met only by providing "a sinking fund sufficient to pay the accruing interest and redeem the principal within thirty-four years."

It may be suggested, however, that these very difficulties only tend to show the inefficient character of the present West Virginia Commission, but not so. If the two Commissions should reach an amicable and satisfactory adjustment of the controversy and the West Virginia Commission should report the result of such negotiations to the governor of that State and he should convene the legislature of his State, and transmit to it such report, with his recommendation added thereto, it would only be reasonable and proper to presume that the West Virginia legislature would confirm the report and take the necessary steps to carry it into execution.

It would be incorrect to say, as suggested by the representatives of the Commonwealth of Virginia, that this course would leave the whole matter at large and open up every question de novo for discussion upon the hustings and in the legislature, for it will be observed that the West Virginia resolution provides that—

> "The Commission shall make a report to the governor as soon as practicable, and, upon receipt of said report, the governor shall convene the legislature for the consideration of the same."

This means (unless unnecessary time should be consumed by the negotiation) that the members of the present legislature would be convened in extraordinary session by the governor, and that too before the election of the members of that body to convene in regular biennial session in the month of January, 1915. No election, therefore, would intervene, and, being none, a discussion upon the "hustings" would not take place.

It is true that the West Virginia legislature, when convened to consider the report of the Commission, would have the power to disappoint us; but we can scarcely believe, and the court will not presume, that it would repudiate an equitable adjustment of this controversy.

OBSERVATIONS.

This court has proceeded with great caution in this case, that no injustice may be done to either of the high parties litigant. And when reference is made to the fact that this case has been pending for some years, it is not improper to say that there have been no unnecessary delays in the prosecution of this suit, but it has gone forward with that degree of speed consistent with the nature of the case and the requirements of justice. The court has been careful to avoid doing injustice to either of the parties, but desires that time for deliberation may be afforded and a conclusion reached without undue haste.

Should the Virginia Debt Commission reject the proposition for settlement, when made by the West Virginia Commission, then it will be time for the complainant to report this fact to this court, and move to expedite this cause. Until West Virginia has had a reasonable time, and has been afforded opportunity to respond to the suggestions of this court, in an intelligent, orderly manner, and has had time and opportunity to comply with the requirements of the resolutions of the West Virginia Legislature, West Virginia will not be in default, and until such reasonable time elapses, a motion to speed this cause is premature, and to sustain this motion at this time, it is most respectfully submitted, would deprive this State of the right and privilege which this court has afforded her, of a peaceable adjustment of a quasi-international dispute.

It is therefore most respectfully submitted that this motion should, at this time, be overruled, or, it should be continued for a sufficient time to enable the West Virginia Commission to complete its labors, and to perform its duties, and it is suggested that not less than six months be given for that purpose.

Respectfully submitted,

A. A. LILLY,
Attorney General of West Virginia.

COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA, COMPLAINANT,

v.

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA, DEFENDANT.

IN EQUITY.

NOTE OF ARGUMENT IN SUPPORT OF COMPLAINANT'S MOTION THAT THE COURT SHALL PROCEED TO ADJUDICATE ALL UNDECIDED QUESTIONS IN THE CAUSE.

The exhibits printed with this motion will inform the Court of the failure of all efforts so far made looking to any adjustment by agreement between the two states of the matters not determined by the decision pronounced on the 6th of March, 1911 (220 U. S., p. 1).

It is pertinent to the present motion to recall that this cause had been already pending in this Court for more than five years when that decision was rendered, and had then been repeatedly and exhaustively argued by counsel, and considered by the Court upon the material issues presented in the pleadings, or evolved in the various stages of the litigation as it progressed; that the defendant was represented all through the litigation by some of the most learned and most resourceful lawyers in America, who made every defense which could be suggested by trained and alert minds fully informed as to the facts of the case; that the case had been referred to a learned and able Special Master, who, aided by expert accountants, and after months of intelligent and unremitting labor, and after hearing and considering all that counsel for the parties could bring to his attention, had made the findings upon which the Court in large measure based its decision.

The decision thus made settled that West Virginia had assumed and owes an equitable portion of the common debt of undivided Virginia; and it settled the basis and principles upon which the amount of the principal of that debt should be ascertained.

It went further and applying those principles to the figures as computed by the Court ascertained the share of the principal sum due by West Virginia to be $7,182,507.46. Virginia v. West Virginia, 220 U. S. 1-35.

The Court forbore to decide what was the extent or measure of West Virginia's liability to pay interest upon her equitable share of the common interest-bearing debt of the unsevered Commonwealth.

That question alone was distinctly referred back to the two states for friendly compromise and adjustment between them, if possible.

That question was unquestionably reserved for future consideration and decision by the Court after a reference to the Special Master, in the event that the two litigants should fail or be unable to agree upon terms for its adjustment.

No other question was expressly or distinctly referred back to these litigants by the Court, though there was a reservation, in the opinion of the Court, as to the finality and precise accuracy of the computation by which the Court, applying the principles it approved to the figures it adopted, had reached the mathematical result stated.

Besides the foregoing, it does not appear that there were any controverted questions reserved by the terms of the Court's decision, and the only one of these which was distinctly referred to the two states for adjustment, was that as to West Virginia's liability for interest.

The Commonwealth of Virginia, in obedience to the recommendation of this Court, transmitted a copy of this decision to the Governor of West Virginia on May 2d, 1911, with the request that he would lay it before the Legislature of West Virginia, then soon to assemble, to the end that provision might be made for the conference between the two states as recommended by the Court. No response having been made to this communication, and no action having been taken by any of the constituted authorities of West Virginia with reference to the overtures so made by the Commonwealth of Virginia for the conference above referred to, the Commonwealth of Virginia moved this Court at the October Term, 1911, in accordance with the alternative suggestion made in its decision, to speed the cause by referring it to the Master to make and report such calculations as might be necessary for a final decree. On the 30th of October, 1911, the Court rendered its decision (222 U. S., page 17) on the motion of the complainant to speed the cause, overruling said motion on the ground that "the time had not come for granting it," the Court being of opinion that the authorities of West Virginia should be allowed, if they saw fit, to await the regular session of the Legislature to take action on the Court's recommendation for a joint conference between the two states. But the Court, in extending this indulgence to West Virginia, nevertheless, declared that "a question like the present should be disposed of without undue delay."

The Legislature of West Virginia met in regular session on the ..... day of January, 1913, and on the 21st of February adopted a joint resolution in words and figures following:

CONFERENCE COMMITTEE'S SUBSTITUTE FOR HOUSE SUBSTITUTE FOR SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION NO. 5.

(Adopted February 21, 1913.)

Creating a commission, known as the Virginia debt commission, to provide for arranging and settling with the commonwealth of Virginia the proper proportion of the public debt of the original commonwealth of Virginia, if any should be borne by West Virginia, to take into consideration all matters arising between the commonwealth of Virginia and the state of West Virginia in reference to said original public debt, and to report its proceedings to the governor of the state.

WHEREAS, The commonwealth of Virginia instituted a suit in the supreme court of the United States against the state of West Virginia, to have the state of West Virginia's proportion of the public debt of Virginia as it stood before one thousand eight hundred and sixty-one, ascertained and satisfied; and,

WHEREAS, At the October term, one thousand nine hundred and ten, the supreme court of the United States made a finding that the share of the principal debt of the original commonwealth of Virginia to be borne by the state of West Virginia, was seven million one hundred and eighty-two thousand six hundred and seven dollars and forty-six cents; and,

WHEREAS, Said court did not fully and finally decide the question involved, but suggested that such proceedings and negotiations should be had between the states upon all the questions involved in said litigation, as might lead to a settlement of the same; therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of West Virginia, the House of Delegates concurring therein:

That a commission of eleven members, known as the Virginia debt commission, is hereby created. The members of said commission shall be appointed by the governor, two of whom shall be chosen from each congressional district of the state, and one at large, not more than six of whom shall belong to any one political party, and all resignations or vacancies in the said commission as they occur shall be filled by the appointment of the governor.

Said commission is authorized and directed to negotiate with the commonwealth of Virginia, or with any person or committee owning or holding any part of the said indebtedness for a settlement of West Virginia's proportion of the debt of the original commonwealth of Virginia proper, to be borne by the state of West Virginia.

The commission is hereby directed to ascertain and report upon and give the utmost publicity to all the facts in relation to the pending suit instituted against the state of West Virginia

by the commonwealth of Virginia, and to ascertain and report upon and give like publicity to all the facts and conditions under which the West Virginia certificates are held or owned, together with the names and residences of the persons having the legal or equitable right to receive from West Virginia whatever may be ascertained to be payable thereon.

To ascertain and report as to any part of the Virginia debt claimed against the state of West Virginia, which is owned or held or claimed to be due, at law or in equity, by the commonwealth of Virginia in her own right; and having made the investigation required hereby, said commission is authorized and directed to negotiate with the commonwealth of Virginia for a settlement of West Virginia's proportion of the debt of the original commonwealth of Virginia proper, to be borne by the state of West Virginia.

A majority of said commission shall have authority to act. The commission shall choose its chairman and appoint its secretary and other necessary officers.

The expenses properly incurred by the commission and its individual members, including compensation of said members at the rate of ten dollars per day for the time actually employed, shall be paid by the state out of the moneys appropriated for said purpose.

The commission shall make a report to the governor as soon as practicable, and upon receipt of said report the governor shall convene the legislature for the consideration of the same.

The commission is hereby authorized to sit within or without the state and to send for papers and records, and to examine witnesses under oath.

Pursuant to this resolution the Governor of West Virginia appointed the eleven members of the West Virginia Commission therein provided for, and on the 25th of July the commissions of the two states met in joint conference, and the proceedings of said joint conference, stenographically reported, are filed as Exhibit B with the printed motion of the complainant.

With profound regret we have to show the Court that West Virginia has failed to accede to the suggestions of the Court and the invitations of Virginia, repeatedly made and urged by her representatives, in obedience to the views and suggestions of the Court.

As will be seen from the stenographic report of the conferences and communications between the commissioners of the two states, the West Virginia Commission would agree to no negotiations with Virginia unless, ignoring the decision of this Court and all the vast expenditure of time, labor, and money, which it cost the parties to reach that result, the Virginia Commission would agree that, surrendering the just rights under that decision of Virginia and her creditors represented by her, the whole case, and all the questions which had been, or could be, raised in the case, should be opened up and considered de novo just as though no decision had been made by the Court.

The Court will see from the frank and explicit statements made by the Chairman of the West Virginia Commission, speaking for and by authority of that Commission, that the only basis upon which that Commission was willing to negotiate, was that the whole subject matter of the controversy between the two states should be opened up and gone into, by the two commissions de novo; and that even that should be done without any purpose or power on the part of the West Virginia Commission to settle anything, to determine anything, or bind West Virginia to pay one dollar of either principal or interest.

This abundantly appears from the record of the joint conferences between the two commissions printed with this motion. (See pages 14, 26, 27, 31, 32, 39, 41, 43, 44, 45, and 46, of motion.)

The Virginia Commission was prepared, and was empowered, with the approval of the Attorney-General of the Commonwealth, to negotiate and to make a compromise settlement with West Virginia, both of the rate and amount of interest to be paid by West Virginia, and of the time and mode of payment of both principal and interest, or to agree a lump sum which West Virginia might pay, in discharge of her entire liability, including principal and interest as of the date of such agreement; and to agree that the terms of any such final adjustment should be embodied in a consent decree to be entered by this Court in this cause; but they could not with fidelity to the trust devolved upon them, or with due respect for the Court, agree to ignore the decisions of this Court, and all the work done in this case, and embark upon an inquiry which meant nothing but hopeless and indefinite delay. They could not consent to take the case out of the hands of the Court, and refer all questions de novo to the decision of the two commissions.

If there were no other insuperable objections to such a course the inevitable delay which such a procedure would involve would be sufficient.

It must be remembered, however, that the West Virginia Commission was not only unwilling to agree to conduct any negotiation which was limited to the question actually referred by this Court back to the two states for adjustment, but was powerless to make any agreement which would bind West Virginia in any particular; that they were clothed, in the language of their Chairman, with "only limited advisory power," or powers of inquiry, and could do nothing which would settle anything. Even if the West Virginia Commission should reach a conclusion, and it should be such a result as the Virginia Commission could accept, it would not bind West Virginia. It would settle nothing, but would leave the whole matter to be fought over in the West Virginia Legislature, and before the people of that state on the hustings and at the polls. Nor can we, in this connection, overlook the fact that the people of West Virginia have, for a generation, been taught to believe that West Virginia does not owe, and, whether she owes or not, can not be compelled to pay one dollar of this debt.

If, therefore, the Virginia Commission entered into negotiation with the West Virginia Commission, it must be upon unequal terms, for, while the Virginia Commission could with the concurrence of her Attorney-General commit Virginia, the West Virginia Commission could not bind West Virginia to any proposal, or any terms whatever.

Although any negotiation under such conditions would be unfair to Virginia, yet such was the desire of her representatives to do all in their power to bring about a settlement of this controversy that the Virginia Commission was willing to enter upon a conference with the West Virginia Commission for the purpose of adjusting, if possible, the question of interest, which, under the facts and circumstances of this case, because of West Virginia's delay in making any settlement, constitutes the largest item of Virginia's equitable claim against West Virginia; but the West Virginia Commission declined to enter into any negotiation upon any such basis, and insisted upon the condition that any negotiation should embrace de novo the whole question of West Virginia's liability, "if any," principal and interest.

It must be apparent from what transpired between the two commissions that no satisfactory result could have been reached by negotiation, whether it was unlimited in its scope, or limited to the question of interest, and that any efforts along either line would only lead to delay, as anything which the West Virginia Commission might conclude would be merely "advisory," and would have to go back to the Legislature and people of West Virginia.

The West Virginia commissioners were undoubtedly constrained by the terms of the Act from which they derived their existence and their powers.

The terms of that Act are such as:

(1) To give the Commission created under it no powers to even negotiate with the Virginia Commission until there had been compliance with certain remarkable conditions, which could serve no purpose except delay.

(2) To so limit the powers of the Commission, which it created, as to make them merely inquisitorial and to a "limited" extent "advisory," so as to discourage any hope that any adjustment or settlement would ever result from any negotiation between it and the Virginia Commission, if the latter should be willing to enter into a negotiation upon such unequal terms.

(3) To require that such negotiation should embrace the entire subject matter of the whole original controversy between the two states; namely, in the language of the Resolution of the West Virginia Legislature, the "Settlement of West Virginia's proportion of the debt of the original Commonwealth of Virginia proper, to be borne by West Virginia."

A careful reading of that Act is all that will be needed to show the justice of the foregoing criticism.

The preamble declares that it is the purpose of the Act to create a Commission and provide for arranging and settling the "proper proportion" of the public debt of the original Commonwealth of Virginia, "if any, which should be borne by West Virginia," and "to take into consideration all matters arising between the Commonwealth of Virginia and the state of West Virginia in reference to said original public debt."

The following paragraphs of said Joint Resolution define the powers of the Commission to be created pursuant to its terms:

> "Said commission is authorized and directed to negotiate with the Commonwealth of Virginia, or with any person or committee owning or holding any part of the said indebtedness for a settlement of West Virginia's proportion of the debt of the original Commonwealth of Virginia proper, to be borne by the State of West Virginia.
> "The commission is hereby directed to ascertain and report upon and give the utmost publicity to all facts in relation to the pending suit instituted against the State of West Virginia by the Commonwealth of Virginia, and to ascertain and report upon and give like publicity to all of the facts and conditions under which the West Virginia certificates are held or owned, together with the names and residences of the persons having the legal or equitable right to receive from West Virginia whatever may be ascertained to be payable thereon.
> "To ascertain and report as to any part of the Virginia debt claimed against the State of West Virginia, which is owned or held or claimed to be due, at law or in equity, by the Commonwealth of Virginia in her own right; and having made the investigation required hereby, said commission is authorized and directed to negotiate with the Commonwealth of Virginia for a settlement of West Virginia's proportion of the debt of the original Commonwealth of Virginia proper, to be borne by the State of West Virginia.

"A majority of said commission shall have authority to act. The commission shall choose its chairman and appoint its secretary and other necessary officers.

"The commission shall make a report to the governor as soon as practicable, and upon the receipt of said report the governor shall convene the legislature for the consideration of the same."

It is manifest that the Commission is given merely inquisitorial and ministerial powers; powers which its distinguished Chairman described, as stated in a former part of this brief, as "advisory," though that definition is hardly justified by the extraordinary language of the Resolution.

It is true the Commission is empowered to "negotiate," but that is as far as they can go. Any proposition for a settlement which might result from such negotiation would not bind anybody (unless, indeed, Virginia, should be bound).

So far as West Virginia is concerned, it would not even have the force or dignity of a proposal. It would be merely a suggestion or recommendation from her commission, as to which the only function of the Commission would be to report it to the Governor of West Virginia, who would lay it before the West Virginia Legislature, which he would thereupon convene. It would have neither force not effect unless, and until, it should be approved and adopted by that legislature.

That body, made up of many men of many minds, might approve the Commission's Report possibly; or they might make material amendements in it and adopt it as thus modified; or they might repudiate it entirely and appoint another commission to "negotiate"; or, what is not improbable, they might submit it by a referendum to a popular vote.

The Court has said, "the conference suggested by the Court is a conference in the cause—not for an independent compromise out of Court, but an attempt to settle a decree." (Va. v. W. Va., 222 U. S. 17.) The Resolution of the Legislature of West Virginia fails to respond in any particular to this declared purpose of the Court in suggesting this conference. The terms of the Resolution not only prohibit the Commission from consenting to a decree, but from consenting to anything else, and absolutely preclude the hope that any progress can be made towards a settlement of this controversy through the means suggested by the Court.

But perhaps an equally fatal vice in this West Virginia enactment is that by its express terms the Commission it creates is powerless even to "negotiate," until it has done certain other things and ascertained certain facts, some of which it may require months or years to ascertain, if, indeed, they can ever be determined.

It makes no difference that these facts, or their ascertainment, are absolutely irrelevant to any question as to the nature and extent of West Virginia's liability to pay an equitable portion of the principal and interest of the debt. This Resolution is the only power of attorney under which said Commission can act at all, and its functions and powers are absolutely limited by the terms of that Resolution, even though those terms and conditions should be unreasonable and absurd.

If the language of the Resolution means anything, it requires said Commission:

> "(1) To ascertain and report upon and give the utmost publicity to all facts in relation to the pending suit instituted against the State of West Virginia by the Commonwealth of Virginia, and to report upon and give like publicity to all of the facts and conditions under which the West Virginia certificates are held and owned, together with the names and residences of the persons having a legal or equitable right to receive from West Virginia whatever may be ascertained to be payable thereon;" and,

"(2) To ascertain and report as to any part of the Virginia debt claimed against the State of West Virginia, which is owned by the Commonwealth of Virginia in her own right."

And then follows this extraordinary provision:

" . . . and having made the investigation required hereby, said Commission is authorized and directed to negotiate with the Commonwealth of Virginia for a settlement of West Virginia's proportion of the debt of the original Commonwealth of Virginia proper, to be borne by the State of West Virginia."

It is manifest from this language of the Resolution that the West Virginia Commission is powerless even to negotiate with Virginia, until it has made and completed the investigation directed by the Resolution to be made.

Any negotiation between that Commission and the Virginia Commission was, and will be, ultra vires as to the West Virginia Commission, until it has completed said investigation.

It matters not that said investigation can throw no possible light upon the question of West Virginia's liability; or that it is entirely foreign to the purpose of the Court in suggesting this conference; or that it will lead to indefinite delay. Ita scripta est lex, which defines the Commission's power to "negotiate," and that requirement must be, to say the least, substantially complied with before the West Virginia Commission could enter upon any negotiation with Virginia for any settlement of West Virginia's share of the debt.

The branch of the investigation, requiring the ascertainment of all the facts in relation to the pending suit, is so vaguely defined in the Resolution, that it is difficult to understand what is meant by it. But all the facts in regard to that suit, whatever that may mean and however irrelevant and valueless, must be investigated by the Commission before it can begin to negotiate with Virginia.

The bill and exhibits in the cause show the facts, "under which the West Virginia certificates are held," but the ownership of these certificates is constantly changing, and, in the nature of things, it would be difficult, expensive, and, indeed, impossible to ascertain the "names and residences" of the owners at any given date. This is, therefore, not only an irrelevant, but an impracticable condition precedent, which the West Virginia Resolution requires to be performed before her Commission is authorized to begin negotiations.

The portion of the debt "claimed against the State of West Virginia, which is owned by the Commonwealth of Virginia in her own right," can be ascertained from the records, but that is a matter of no interest to West Virginia, and would be absolutely valueless in determining her liability in this cause. Nevertheless, the West Virginia Resolution makes the investigation of the facts as to Virginia's interest in her own right a condition precedent to any negotiations with Virginia.

These provisions of the Resolution are but added proof of the impossibility of any settlement with West Virginia ever being reached under that enactment.

On behalf of the Virginia Debt Commission, of the counsel for Virginia in this cause and of the Commonwealth whom they represent, we beg to express deep regret that the efforts of Virginia to bring about a settlement with West Virginia, in accordance with the suggestions of the Court, have met with no success. Candor also requires us to say that there is nothing in the situation which justifies the hope that any adjustment will, or can ever, be made between the parties litigant—a condition for which Virginia is in no degree responsible.

In these circumstances, the complainant, the Commonwealth of Virginia, submits that there is no rational ground to hope for any advantage to result from further negotiations, and we respectfully submit that the time has come for the cause to be speeded, and, to that end, we earnestly ask that it may be referred to the Master, with instructions to ascertain and report forthwith to the Court the amount of interest which the State of West Virginia should be required to pay on the principal sum already ascertained by the Court, and to make such other calculations as may be necessary to a final decree.

Respectfully submitted,

COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA,

v.

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA.

IN EQUITY.

RESPONSE OF THE COMPLAINANT TO THE MOTION OF THE DEFENDANT SUBMITTED IN THE ABOVE ENTITLED CAUSE.

And now comes the respondent, the Commonwealth of Virginia, by Jno. Garland Pollard, her Attorney-General, and contests and objects to the granting of leave to the State of West Virginia to file a supplemental answer to the bill of complaint, as set forth in the motion submitted in the above cause, with which motion in writing the proposed supplemental answer is exhibited, and for answer to the said motion says:

Seven grounds are assigned upon which this motion is based, the first of which is:

1. That the "value and disposition of the assets set up in the supplemental answer were discovered by the defendant since the last continuance"—that is to say, since November 13, 1913.

In response thereto, this respondent says: That she denies that she received the credits set forth in the statements filed as a basis for this motion; that while said credits are represented to have existed, they are in fact mere estimates as of January 1, 1861, based upon unwarranted assumptions.

Further answering, the respondent says: That more than eight years ago, after years of discussion and fruitless negotiation, as a last resort, this suit was instituted to bring about a settlement of the question of West Virginia's liability for a just proportion of the debt of Virginia, created before her dismemberment. After demurrer—argued and overruled—a maturely considered and carefully prepared answer was filed in October, 1907, by which the defendant, with the utmost distinctness and emphasis, set up her defense against the demands asserted by the complainant. Upon the lines of complaint and defense thus presented by the bill and answer issue was joined, and at an enormous expenditure of time, labor and money, the litigation was conducted until a decision was rendered by this court on the 6th day of March, 1911, settling the principles of the cause and fixing "the share of the principal of the debt of Virginia which West Virginia had assumed."

From the inception of this suit, and throughout its entire progress, up to and including the decision of the court upon the merits of the case, the defendant has had the benefit of the services of two attorneys-general and seven able and distinguished lawyers associated with them and a corps of expert accountants, the latter of whom were engaged continuously under the direction of counsel for more than twelve months in investigating the records of your respondent relating to the subject matter of this suit contained in the Capitol, at Richmond, in the progress of which work every possible facility was afforded by the officers of your respondent having custody of these records.

The defense thus prepared was presented to the Master and the court upon elaborate oral and printed arguments, and all facts and circumstances which might be used in the interest of the defendant were marshalled and urged upon their attention with extraordinary ability. The Special Master, after an inquiry and examination on his part extending through a period of eighteen months, made a report to the court, covering many hundreds of pages of testimony, tabulated statements made by expert accountants, and copies from the records of all documents bearing upon or having any relation to the subject of Virginia's debt, and from this report of the Master and the evidence therein set forth, and after the cause had been submitted for final hearing, the court ascertained and decided that the amount of $7,182,507.46 was due by West Virginia as representing her share of the principal of said debt, leaving open only the question of what interest, if any, and the rate thereof should be paid by West Virginia upon that ascertained liability, and the correction of any possible errors of computation which may have been made in the calculations by which that result was reached.

Now, after the cause has been litigated for more than eight years upon lines of the defendant's own selection and upon those presented by the record made up with infinite pains and labor with the assistance of trained and expert accountants employed by the defendant, and after every defense which the skill and resourceful ingenuity of her chosen counsel could bring forward from these records and the facts they disclosed, and the cause fought to a finish upon those deliberately chosen lines of defense and a decision rendered upon the main question involved, which decision has been reiterated and affirmed by the decision of the court rendered on the 30th of October, 1911, and again by its decision rendered on the 13th of November, 1913, the defendant comes into court in the beginning of this the ninth year of the litigation and asks to be permitted to assert a new line of defense, which has been all along open to her for her adoption, and to litigate the case over again upon these alleged new grounds.

If the grounds upon which this motion is based were meritorious, they should be so clear and explicit as to negative notice to the defendant of the material facts upon which her alleged defences are founded and also of any facts which would have reasonably put her upon inquiry; or which would, to say the least, by the use of ordinary diligence have informed her as to their existence.

But the truth as to these matters renders any reliance upon constructive notice or any refinements of reasoning unnecessary.

This respondent says that the defendant had full and complete notice and full knowledge of the facts upon which this motion is founded both before and during the pendency of this suit, and before and at the time of the filing of her answer to the bill in this cause, and before and at the time of the argument and submission of the same for final decision, all of which appears from the record.

In February, 1871, the legislature of West Virginia adopted a joint resolution under which Messrs. John J. Jackson, A. W. Campbell and J. M. Bennett were appointed commissioners on the part of West Virginia to take up with Virginia the question of an adjustment of the public debt of Virginia prior to the 1st day of January, 1861. These commissioners made an independent investigation and submitted a report to the Governor of West Virginia, embodied in which were eight tabulated statements or schedules designated by the letters from "A" to "H," inclusive. Commissioner Bennett had been, before and during the war, the auditor of public accounts of the State of Virginia, and was thoroughly familiar with all facts in relation to her public debt, and was supposed to have been the author of that report; at all events, it has been since referred to as "Bennett's Report." This report, with its accompanying statements, was introduced into the record by the defendant; it is referred to in Exhibit No. 3 filed with the defendant's answer (see vol. 2, W. Va. Compilation, p. 28), and is printed in full in vol. 1 of W. Va. compilation beginning at page 457. The material facts as to all of the stocks, bonds and other property of the Commonwealth of Virginia, with one or two immaterial exceptions, as of the 1st day of January, 1861, will be found to be shown by the schedules marked "Statements" "B," "G," and "H," filed with this report. These statements furnish in great detail the facts as to the assets and public property of the Commonwealth which are now set forth as a basis for this motion.

Furthermore, the defendant's accountants prepared under the direction of her counsel a "balance sheet" called "Summary of cash receipts and disbursements of the Commonwealth of Virginia from March 17, 1823, to January 1, 1861," which the defendant filed with the record as "defendant's exhibit" (printed record, beginning at page 1053).

"Schedule No. 4" of this exhibit contains a list of "expenditures on account of banks and public internal improvements charged by the defendant to the present Commonwealth of Virginia" amounting to $27,586,527.60 (printed record, p. 1059); and under the caption "disbursements" are shown the several items consisting of "balances January 1, 1861," which it is now claimed to have been discovered "since the last continuance" (printed record, page 1054).

These two statements show conclusively that the State of West Virginia and her former counsel who prepared and conducted the defense of this suit were fully informed in respect to the data and material which are now set up as "newly discovered" and are relied upon as the basis for re-opening this case.

It thus appears that although the defendant had every opportunity to assert these purported claims, now relied upon as new defences, and to have the same passed on by the court, as she was in duty bound to do if she had intended to rely upon them, they are not mentioned in the original answer filed by the defendant in this cause at the October term, 1907, nor is any intimation given therein of the purpose to assert or rely upon them.

Your respondent is advised, and so states, that even if it had ever been pertinent to inquire into the alleged value of these assets, the period at which such valuation should be made was not January 1, 1861, as is assumed by the defendant, but June 20, 1863, the date of the creation of the new state, and the date as of which this court ascertained the values of property in the two states as the basis for the apportionment of the debt; and your respondent states that there is now no means of showing, even by way of reasonable approximation, the value of said assets in June, 1863.

It is part of the history of those troublous times, confirmed by the testimony taken before the special master in this cause, that all values of property in Confederate Virginia were enormously depreciated in 1863. This was necessarily especially true of railroads and canals, which inevitably shared most largely in the destruction and dilapidation of exhausting and disastrous war.

With no market for their purchase because of the wretched condition of the country, and the darkening outlook for the future, it is not strange that such stocks and bonds as the defendant now seeks to charge against Virginia were on the 20th of June, 1863, so valueless that it would be a vain and unjust thing to seek now to make them a basis for fixing a liability upon Virginia.

The same is true of the banks in Confederate Virginia. Their assets, which in 1861 rested firmly upon a gold or gold and silver basis, had [as was the case throughout the seceded States] been rapidly depreciating, and had shifted from a gold basis to a Confederate basis, and were steadily and rapidly descending towards the worthlessness which characterized them at the close of the war.

Why then should this court at this late day be asked to enter upon a fruitless inquiry into the value of Virginia's securities at a time when she was in the throes of war,—when there was no market value for her securities, and, therefore, no just standard of values? There were in those days no "market quotations" because there was no market. How then shall the values be proven? By the uncertain estimates or "guesses" of aged men as to the probable values of more than fifty years ago? If so, then West Virginia has done Virginia an injustice in having failed through the years of this litigation to set up this defense upon which she now relies, for each passing year leaves fewer and fewer of those whose memory of such facts reaches back to 1863. For this court now to attempt to ascertain the values of these securities as of June, 1863, would be to enter the futile field of conjecture.

The defendant, in speaking of this period, through her former counsel, said:

> "True Virginia has suffered; she was through four years a battle ground; her people were largely withdrawn from their vocations of business; her agriculture languished, and much of her property was destroyed by contending armies." (Brief of Counsel for West Virginia, vol. 2 W. Va. Compilation, page 115).

Hence the defendant in referring in her answer to her liability for the value of stocks, bonds and credits transferred to her by the "restored government of Virginia" by the act of February 3, 1863, said:

> "And she avers that at the time when such stocks and credits were transferred they were greatly depreciated and were of but little value." (Vol. 2, W. Va. Compilation, page 8).

If the stocks and credits transferred to the defendant by Virginia in 1863 were of "but little value," the same would be true of those retained by Virginia, as the cause which operated to destroy the value of the one would so operate upon the other—with this difference: that the destruction would have been more complete in Virginia, as her soil was a "battle ground."

Among the former counsel for the defendant, and the draftsman of her answer (as your respondent is informed), was the late Wesley Mollohan, a gentleman who stood in the front rank of the West Virginia Bar and whose brethren of that State have since his death paid generous and glowing tribute to his character and attainments. He was a native of Virginia, and a resident of West Virginia from the time of her formation until his death. No man in Virginia was better informed than he in respect to her history, her resources, investments and the value of such investments during the period of the war or the disposition of them, and the fact that he considered them of "but little value" may be accepted as proof of that fact and as conclusively showing that the delay and expense involved in an inquiry into that subject would not, in his opinion, have been justified from the standpoint of the defendant.

2. The second ground in support of this motion is, that "the evidence of the existence, value and disposition of said assets was in the possession of the State of Virginia, and she did not volunteer the disclosure thereof."

In reply thereto this respondent says, that, as already shown, the knowledge of the existence of said assets had been in possession of the defendant since the report of her commission in 1871, and were further fully and completely disclosed by the "balance sheet" of Virginia, prepared by the defendant's accountants and put in the record by her counsel; in other words, your respondent wishes to emphasize the statement that while the existence of these alleged assets may have been recently "discovered" by the defendant's present attorneys, Virginia possessed no knowledge in respect to said assets that was not also in the possession of or readily accessible to the defendant's former attorneys who conducted this case for and on her behalf.

The proposed amended answer of the defendant appears to call for an apportionment of alleged assets of the original state as of January 1, 1861, but, as already mentioned, West Virginia was not formed until June 20, 1863, and, of course, could not claim an interest in any such assets until that date, and there could be no charge against Virginia with respect to them, except in accordance with their value as of that date.

The "disposition" of said alleged assets therefore after June 20, 1863, has no relevancy to or bearing upon the issue raised by this motion, as already pointed out. Your respondent repeats that she has no information as to the value of said assets as of June, 1863, which is not equally accessible to West Virginia, nor does there exist, so far as she or her counsel are informed, any proofs or any evidence anywhere which would determine, even approximately, the value of these alleged assets or show that they had any appreciable or ascertainable value in June, 1863, except in the well nigh worthless paper currency of the Confederate States, in which Governor Letcher estimated their value in his message in September, 1863, quoted by the defendant in its proposed supplemental answer.

This respondent, therefore, says, that the statement that she withheld any information touching these matters from the defendant is as gratuitous as it is unwarranted.

3. In response to the third ground assigned, the respondent denies the proposition that diligence cannot be required of a state to "ascertain the evidence governing its rights when in controversy." If this were true, there could never be an end to a controversy to which a State is a party.

To say that because the state may have frequently changed its officers she thereby becomes not affected by notice duly given to her or knowledge acquired by her through her preceding officers or agents in charge of the matters involved, would result in preventing the state becoming bound by any notice or knowledge which might have been given to or acquired by any officer or agent of the state whose term of authority had expired—a result so manifestly unfair to parties having dealings with the state as not to be tolerated by a court of justice.

4. In response to the fourth ground assigned respondent says, that if it were true that the decree of reference did not call for a "discovery" of these alleged assets, such omission would furnish no ground for the defendant's motion to reopen this case. But it is not true, as alleged, that the decree of reference did not call for or authorize such discovery. Under the decree of reference the master was directed to ascertain and report upon certain matters referred to him, and was also "at liberty to state any special circumstances he considered of importance, and to state such alternative accounts as may be desired by either of the parties subject to the direction of the court." (W. Va. Compilation, vol. 2, p. 49.)

As already pointed out, the defendant's counsel were fully informed of the existence of these alleged assets, and under this authority it was, of course, not only competent for her counsel, but the duty of her counsel, to have an "alternative account" stated in respect to these assets, if they "desired."

5. In response to the fifth ground assigned, the respondent denies that any such equity exists as therein claimed and asserted.

6. In response to the sixth ground assigned, the respondent says, that if the provisions of her Constitution of 1851 therein referred to had any bearing on the issue now raised, which is denied, they were known to or readily accessible to the defendant's counsel to whom she had intrusted her interests in this suit.

7. In response to the seventh ground assigned, the respondent denies that she collected or received the sum stated therein, or any sum approximating that amount, as dividends upon investments; and further denies that the alleged facts therein referred to, if true, would affect the defendant's liability to pay interest on the principal sum found against her by the decisions of this court. The respondent further answering, at the risk of repetition, says, that any alleged new facts which have any relation to or bearing upon the issue raised by this motion were fully known to the former counsel of the defendant.

It may be noted that the defendant now appears to assert a claim to a share of the public buildings, libraries, etc., remaining in the present State of Virginia—a claim which was denied by her former counsel, who insisted that all public property, such as state institutions, public buildings, charitable and other endowments, state banks, railroads and internal improvements "local to the two states" belonged to said states, respectively, upon the separation. (See Vol. 1, W. Va. Compilation, pages 137-8-9, and Vol. 2, p. 270.)

Your respondent begs leave further, in reply to said motion, to say: That at the meeting between the commissions representing the respective states held July 25, 1913, the Virginia Commission declined the demand of the West Virginia Commission to reopen this case and enter upon a consideration de novo of all questions involved, for the reason, as then pointed out, that the court by its decision of March 3, 1911 (reaffirmed by its decision of October 30, 1911,) had fixed the amount of the defendant's share of the principal of said debt, except for clerical errors, and had referred to the two states for adjustment any mere clerical errors which might be shown in the principal sum so fixed, and what, if any, interest and the rate thereof said sum so fixed should bear. This decision was again reaffirmed by the court in its decision rendered on November 13, 1913, wherein the court said:

> "In March, 1911, (Virginia v. West Virginia, 220 U. S. 1) our decision was given 'with respect to the basis of liability and the share of the principal of the debt of Virginia that West Virginia assumed.' In view, however, of the nature of the controversy, of the consideration due the respective states, and the hope that by agreement between them further judicial action might be unnecessary we postponed proceeding to a final decree and left open the question of what, if any interest was due and the rate thereof, as well as the right to suggest any mere clerical error which it was deemed might have been committed in fixing the sum found to be due upon the basis of liability which was settled."

These decisions of the court, while not so in form, nevertheless virtually constitute a decree of the court. They fixed in plain language the "share of the principal of the debt of Virginia that West Virginia assumed." If West Virginia was dissatisfied with this decision on any ground, your respondent is advised that her remedy was to apply immediately for a rehearing. This the defendant did not do; and now, after the case has been before the court for eight years, and three years have elapsed since the decision was rendered fixing her liability for her "share of the principal of the debt of Virginia," she appears and moves the court to be allowed to contest that decision on new grounds set up in a supplemental answer—and that notwithstanding these alleged new facts were well known to and considered by her accountants and counsel, as shown by the record.

To grant this motion, your respondent respectfully submits, would involve a heavy burden of expense, and indefinitely postpone a final determination of this controversy, and subject your respondent to great injury. No injustice has been done the defendant. Every possible consideration and indulgence has been shown her, and her defense has been industriously and thoroughly prepared and fully and ably presented many times before the master and the court, in the light of and with full knowledge of the facts now alleged to have been "just discovered." To grant this motion at this late day and under the circumstances stated would, it is respectfully submitted, defeat and not subserve the ends of justice.

Your respondent has paid and assumed to pay, as shown by the record, more than seventy million dollars on account of her share of the debt created before her dismemberment, and she ventures respectfully to assert that West Virginia's proposal to fix her own share of the debt at $2,300,000, without interest, after this court had fixed her share of the principal at $7,183,507.46, could not have been submitted with the expectation that it would receive consideration or furnish the basis for an adjustment of this controversy.

All the data is before the court which will enable it to determine the question of interest and the rate thereof, as well as the views of your respondent's counsel on that subject.

In view, therefore, of the foregoing considerations, it is respectfully submitted that the motion of the defendant should be denied and that the cause be finally heard on the 13th of April next, as provided in the order of this court entered November 10, 1913.

And it is further submitted that in the light of all the circumstances, and in order to bring this litigation to a close, the court will allow such rate of interest on the principal sum fixed and for such period of time as in its judgment will meet the ends of justice.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

In the Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1913.

No 2. Original.

COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA

VS.

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA.

IN EQUITY.

RESPONSE OF THE DEFENDANT TO THE MOTION OF THE COMPLAINANT SUBMITTED IN THE ABOVE ENTITLED CAUSE.

And now, on this, the 13th day of October, 1913, comes the respondent, the State of West Virginia, by A. A. Lilly, Esq., the Attorney General of said State, and, for answer to the motion submitted in the above cause to > "Proceed with a further hearing and determination of said case, and to settle and determine all questions left open and undetermined by its decision rendered on the sixth day of March, 1911," says that—

1. This Honorable Court, in its opinion in this cause rendered on the 6th day of March, 1911, after having established the basis for determining the equitable proportion of the public debt of the original State of Virginia which was assumed by the State of West Virginia at the time of its creation as a State, suggested a conference between the two litigating States, to the end that a final decree might be entered by agreement without further contention.

2. The State of West Virginia, in a sincere effort to follow this suggestion, at the first possible moment after it had been made, under its Constitution and laws, undertook, through its Legislature, to establish a Commission competent to deal with the question without further contention, and in the spirit and temper that this Court indicated should characterize the situation.

Under the West Virginia Constitution, the sessions of the Legislature of that State are held biennially, and not annually. The provision of the State Constitution governing this question reads as follows:

> "The legislature shall assemble at the seat of government biennially, and not oftener, unless convened by the Governor."
> W. Va. Constitution of 1872, Art. VI., Sec. 18.

And the regular biennial session thereof in the year 1911 had come to an end prior to the delivery of the opinion of this Court in this cause on the 6th day of March, 1911, wherein the suggestion of a conference between the two States was made; so that a Commission looking to the execution of this Court's suggestion could not have been established by a joint resolution of the two Legislative Houses of the State during that session, and this was the only means, in the judgment of the officials of the State, by which the Court's suggestion could be effectuated.

It is true that the Honorable William E. Glasscock, then Governor of the State of West Virginia, did, by proclamation of the 13th day of April, 1911, convene the Legislature of said State in extraordinary session on the 16th day of May, 1911; but such proclamation did not embrace the consideration, or authorize the appointment, of a Virginia Debt Commission, and, in consequence, under the Constitution of the State, the Legislature, when so convened, could not enter upon the business of appointing such Commission. The constitutional provision referred to reads as follows:

> "The Governor may, on extraordinary occasions, convene at his own instance the legislature; but, when so convened, it shall enter upon no business except that stated in the proclamation by which it was called together."
> W. Va. Constitution of 1872, Art. VII., Sec. 7.

The facts and circumstances surrounding this extraordinary session of the Legislature of West Virginia, and the reasons why the proclamation of the Governor convening it did not call for the appointment of a Virginia Debt Commission, were fully set forth and given in the response of the State of West Virginia to the like motion of the State of Virginia made and submitted in this cause on the 10th day of October, 1911, and were considered by this Honorable Court a sufficient justification for the State of West Virginia to postpone the appointment of a Virginia Debt Commission until the next regular session of the Legislature of that State, to be held in January, 1913.

3. At the time appointed by the Constitution of the State of West Virginia, its Legislature next met in regular session on the 8th day of January, 1913, and, during that session, that is to say, on the 21st day of February, 1913, a joint resolution was passed creating a Virginia Debt Commission, to be composed of eleven members, to be appointed by the Governor, and with authority and direction, among other things, "to negotiate with the Commonwealth of Virginia for a settlement of West Virginia's proportion of the debt of the original Commonwealth of Virginia proper to be borne by the State of West Virginia." This joint resolution is correctly set forth in the second paragraph of the motion of the complainant filed herein, and a copy thereof was transmitted by the Governor of West Virginia to the Governor of Virginia on the 12th day of March, 1913, with the accompanying promise that the Commission therein provided for would be appointed without unnecessary delay.

4. Within eleven days after the passage of the foregoing resolution, that is to say, upon the 4th day of March, 1913, the newly elected Governor of the State of West Virginia, the Honorable H. D. Hatfield, was inaugurated; and, notwithstanding the fact that he found martial law declared, and in existence, in a large mining district in the State, requiring the services of nearly the entire National Guard of the State, and calling for the devotion of almost his entire time, to the end that blood and bankruptcy might be avoided, which trouble was speedily contributed to during the latter part of the month of March by disastrous floods in the Ohio Valley, necessitating State aid and State protection, he was not unmindful of the necessity for the settlement of the Virginia debt question, and, after due reflection, in an effort to find suitable men for the consummation of this Honorable Court's suggestion, on the 19th day of April, 1913, appointed the eleven Commissioners required by the legislative resolution. Several of the Commissioners so appointed, after some hesitation and delay, declined, and it became necessary to seek other competent and suitable men. This was done without unnecessary delay, and the Commission was finally completed by the filling of vacancies on the 10th day of June, 1913, and, upon the same day, it was organized by the election of the Honorable John W. Mason as Chairman, and of the Honorable John T. Harris as Secretary.

Without the loss of any time, that is to say, upon the same day (June 10, 1913), the Governor of the State of West Virginia communicated by letter with the Governor of the State of Virginia, notifying him of the passage by the West Virginia Legislature of the foregoing resolution establishing the Virginia Debt Commission; that said Commission had been organized, and would meet again on the 22d day of July, 1913, and would be pleased to meet the Virginia Commission at any time after that date, also requesting the Virginia Commission to state where it would be agreeable to hold a joint meeting of the two Commissions. Said letter enclosed not only a copy of the joint resolution, but also a list of the names of the members of said Commission. Said letter is truly set forth as "Exhibit A" to the motion of the complainant herein.

5. Pursuant to the adjournment of June 10, 1913, the West Virginia Commission again met at the City of Charleston, in the State of West Virginia, on the 22d day of July, 1913, and, on the 23d day of that month, adjourned to meet in the City of Washington, D. C., on the 24th day of July, 1913. Pursuant to this last adjournment, it met at Washington on the 24th day of July, and adjourned until the next day, at which time it met in joint session with the Virginia Commission.

6. At the joint conference of the two Commissions held at Washington on the 25th day of July, 1913, as aforesaid, the Virginia Commission took the position that, under the decision of this Court, the sole matter left open and remaining for consideration and adjustment by the two Commissions was "the amount of interest which West Virginia should pay upon the sum ascertained by the Court to be West Virginia's share of the principal" of Virginia's debt. This position is evidenced by the first paragraph of a resolution adopted by the Virginia Commission, and presented through its Chairman to the West Virginia Commission. In response to this resolution, the West Virginia Commission, through its Chairman, among other things, made the following statement:

> "From our standpoint and our reading of the opinion of the Supreme Court, other things are to be considered besides the question of interest."

Following this response of the Chairman of the West Virginia Commission, Mr. Randolph Harrison, selected as spokesman for the Virginia Commission, made a lengthy statement, wherein he elaborated the Virginia position that nothing but interest should be considered, giving his reasons therefor, and embracing therein the construction placed by the Virginia Commission upon the opinion of this Court delivered upon the 6th day of March, 1911, in this cause; but, proceeding, he further said:

> "We also recognize the fact that it is competent for the two Commissions to consider the question of settlement of the entire controversy, precisely as we might do if there were no other question pending before us, and, if it is the pleasure of the West Virginia Commission to take up that question, and communicate to the Virginia Commission at this conference a proposition looking to a compromise settlement of the whole controversy, we will be glad to receive it, and will give it respectful and fair consideration."

In further response to the Virginia position, the West Virginia Commission adopted and presented to the Virginia Commission a resolution, wherein, among other things, it was set forth that, in the view of the West Virginia Commission, the then conference had for its object "a preliminary discussion and exchange of views, and for the added purpose of arranging a method for a more complete consideration of the matters involved, and adjusting a working program"; and it was proposed that each Commission should appoint a sub-committee consisting, respectively, of three of its own members, "with instructions to confer at the earliest convenient time and place, and to thoroughly discuss all matters involved, and endeavor to reach a final proposition that should be submitted back to the two respective Commissions for consideration by each, and for final determination at a joint conference to be subsequently arranged between the Chairmen of the two Committees."

To the foregoing resolution the Virginia Commission, by like resolution, replied by agreeing to the appointment of a sub-committee of three formed from each Commission, provided the consideration of said Committees should be confined to the following matters and things:

> "(1) The amount of interest which West Virginia should pay upon the sum ascertained by the Court in its decision to be West Virginia's share of the principal of the debt.
> (2) Any proposal which West Virginia may deem proper to submit for the final compromise settlement of the proportion of the debt to be borne by West Virginia."

To this the West Virginia Commission, through its Chairman, replied that it was anxious to proceed with the negotiations, but could not consent to agree in advance that only the question of interest should be considered, or that the West Virginia sub-committee should be required to first submit a proposition looking to a settlement, adding that it was willing "and anxious to approach a settlement upon equal terms, leaving, in the first instance, all questions of procedure to the said sub-committees." It further answered that it did not feel sufficiently acquainted with the questions involved—for reasons theretofore stated—to submit a proposition at that time, and asked that the whole subject-matter be submitted to the sub-committees, "with the understanding that the sub-committees be required to report their action for approval to their respective commissions at a time in the near future to be now agreed upon."

The Virginia Commission replied that it felt "constrained to decline the terms proposed by the West Virginia Commission as the basis upon which the conference must proceed."

As a consequence, the sub-committees were not appointed, and, after expressing regret, the West Virginia Commission suggested a future meeting of the joint Commissions, to which the Virginia Commission, after reiterating its former position, and stating that it could not recede therefrom, agreed, and suggested an adjournment until August 12, 1913, at the New Willard Hotel, Washington, provided the future conference should not embrace a consideration de novo of the entire case, and the West Virginia Commission agreed to the time and place of adjournment, but insisted that the adjournment should be "without terms and conditions, and without prejudice to the rights of either party." Thereupon, the conference was adjourned to meet on Tuesday, August 12, 1913, at ten o'clock, A. M., at the New Willard Hotel, Washington, D. C.

The matters and things hereinbefore in this paragraph alleged are set forth in detail in the record of the "Proceedings of a Joint Conference between the Virginia Debt Commissions of the States of Virginia and West Virginia," printed herewith as a part hereof, and marked "Exhibit A."

7. After the West Virginia Commission returned home, the Chairman thereof, through correspondence with its various members, discovered that it would not be prepared, on account of shortness of time, for the adjourned joint conference of the two Commissions to be held on August 12th, and, thereupon, on the 9th of August, he telegraphed to the Chairman of the Virginia Commission as follows:

> "HON. JOHN B. MOON,
> Charlottesville, Va.
> Certain our Debt Commission will not be ready for meeting Tuesday. Members have not had time enough for investigation. We meet Charleston Monday, and will have to ask that time be extended to a day in near future. Under these circumstances, I suggest Washington meeting be now recalled.
> JOHN W. MASON."

8. The West Virginia Commission convened again at Charleston, West Virginia, on the 11th day of August, 1913, and the Chairman reported his telegram to Mr. Moon, and, having received no reply thereto, was directed by the Commission to at once communicate with Mr. Moon by telephone. This he did, and Mr. Moon then informed him that he had notified the members of the Virginia Commission that the August 12th meeting had been recalled, and Mr. Mason suggested that a time be fixed for another meeting in the near future, to be arranged by the Chairmen of the two Commissions, to which Mr. Moon assented.

At this same meeting, the West Virginia Commission adopted the following resolution:

> "Resolved, That a sub-committee, consisting of Messrs. Ord, Young and Ice, is hereby appointed to co-operate with the Attorney General and the associate counsel in this case in drawing up the necessary data and statistics as a basis for propositions to be made to the Virginia Commission, and that either one, two or all of said sub-committee at their convenience, are authorized to perform the work assigned them in connection with this matter."

In pursuance of the foregoing resolution the said sub-committee entered upon its duties, and, after making careful investigation, met in the City of Charleston on the 18th day of September, 1913, and adopted the following resolution:

> "WHEREAS, The sub-committee of the West Virginia Commission of the Virginia Debt Commission appointed to formulate a proposition of settlement to be submitted to the Virginia Commission find it necessary to ascertain certain facts and figures not in the record, and not available from the record, which will take some time, therefore, be it
> Resolved, That the Honorable John W. Mason, Chairman of the West Virginia Commission, be requested to inform the Virginia Commission, by a letter directed to its Chairman, Mr. Moon, that we are diligently at work on a proposition to be submitted to the Virginia Commission, but that further time will be needed to complete it."

In obedience to the foregoing resolution, the Chairman of the West Virginia Debt Commission, on the 22d day of September, 1913, addressed and mailed the following letter to the Hon. John B. Moon, Chairman of the Virginia Debt Commission:

"FAIRMONT, WEST VIRGINIA, September 22, 1913.

HONORABLE J. B. MOON,

Chairman Virginia Debt Commission,

Charlottesville, Virginia.

MY DEAR SIR:

I am instructed by a sub-committee of the West Virginia Commission, appointed by the Governor of that State to negotiate a settlement, in accordance with the suggestions of the Supreme Court of the United States, of the controversy between the States of Virginia and West Virginia, relative to the settlement of the Virginia debt, to say to you, and through you to the Virginia Commission, that the West Virginia Commission has in course of preparation a proposition (looking to a settlement) to be presented to your Commission at the earliest moment; but that it will yet require some three or four months time in which to put said proposition in final and intelligent form. I cordially endorse the recommendation of the sub-committee, and hope it will be agreeable to your Committee to consider the same favorably.

In the meantime, if your Commission should desire to submit any suggestions or propositions to this Commission looking to the same end, we would gladly, and without unnecessary delay, consider the same.

With great respect I remain yours, etc.,

JOHN W. MASON,

Chairman Virginia Debt Commission."

To the foregoing letter, Chairman Moon, under date of the 24th of September, 1913, made reply, and, among other things, said:

"I am sure you will pardon my adverting to the fact that more than two years and a half ago (March 6th, 1911), the Court referred the interest question and any other matter of detailed computation to the two States for their possible agreement, and we sent a sub-committee to your State, who returned without being able to accomplish any results.

Our Commission, therefore, felt constrained to ask for some conclusion of the question of interest involved in the controversy, and requested our Attorney General to act accordingly, though I do not know that this would preclude an agreement, if one could be arrived at in the premises."

9. It appears, therefore, from the foregoing facts and from the motion filed herein by the complainant, which is dated the 22d day of September, 1913, that, upon the very day that the Chairman of the West Virginia Commission was mailing his letter aforesaid to the Chairman of the Virginia Commission, wherein he stated "that the West Virginia Commission has in course of preparation a proposition looking to a settlement to be presented to your Commission at the earliest moment," but requesting a little more time, the Attorney General of Virginia was preparing the present motion to be presented to this Honorable Court, for the purpose, presumably, of ending the negotiations, and renewing the controversy in Court, contrary to the spirit of the suggestion of this Honorable Court as the same is construed and interpreted by this respondent. The motion was served herein upon the 26th day of September, 1913.

The respondent prints herewith a true copy of the proceedings of the West Virginia Commission referred to in the foregoing paragraphs eight and nine as a part hereof, and marks the same "Exhibit B."

10. This respondent, further answering the motion, says that, at the time the letter aforesaid of the 22d of September, 1913, was written by the Chairman of the West Virginia Commission to the Chairman of the Virginia Commission, requesting further time, and stating that a proposition looking to a settlement was in course of preparation by the West Virginia Commission, the sub-committee of the West Virginia Commission was diligently and faithfully at work gathering data upon which to base its proposition of settlement to the Virginia Commission, and is still at work thereon, notwithstanding the service of the notice of the motion herein.

It further says that said letter of the 22d of September, 1913, was prepared and sent to the Chairman of the Virginia Commission in the utmost good faith, and did not seek unnecessary delay, in the judgment of the West Virginia Commission.

11. It is further respectfully submitted that the West Virginia Commission, as it now stands, was not appointed until the 10th day of June, 1913, a period of only four months ago; that it was not prior to its appointment connected in any way with the management or conduct of the litigation in this case, and was, and still is, to a certain extent, unfamiliar with the history and details of the controversy, including the litigation springing thereout; that it should not, in a matter of this importance, proceed with undue haste; that its full membership did not even receive printed copies of the opinions of this Honorable Court delivered in this cause upon the 6th day of March, 1911, and the 30th day of October, 1911, respectively, until about the 1st day of August, 1913, at which time this respondent printed, for the benefit and information of its Commission, a volume, consisting, among other things, of the opinions of this Honorable Court, and the report of the Master in this cause; that, upon the other hand, the present Virginia Commission has been in existence for many years, and has been, as this respondent is informed, identified with and in charge of the present litigation between the two States, and naturally requires less time to properly prepare for the settlement of this controversy in accordance with the suggestion of this Honorable Court than does the Commission of this respondent.

It is also true that the present Attorney General of the State of West Virginia, who, under the Constitution and laws of that State, is its chief law officer, was not inducted into office until the 4th day of March in the present year, and during the early months of the present State administration was largely occupied on behalf of the State with the strike and flood difficulties set forth in the fourth paragraph hereof, thereby abbreviating the time that he might otherwise have devoted to assisting and advising the Commission herein. He was never before his recent election to his present office connected in any way with the Virginia debt question or litigation, and, like the Commission and other officers of this respondent, was under the necessity of informing himself in respect thereto. He has been, and is now, diligently at work with the Commission of this respondent and has but one object in view, and that is the consummation of the suggestion of this Honorable Court made to the parties in its opinion of March 6, 1911.

12. This respondent further says that, while its Commission and the sub-committee thereof, together with the Governor and Attorney General of the State, were diligently and conscientiously using every effort which they reasonably could use, and while they were exercising due diligence and were proceeding with all deliberate speed to carry into execution the requirements imposed upon them by the joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of West Virginia of February 21, 1913, and while they were formulating a proposition to be made to the Virginia Commission, as requested by said Commission at the Washington conference hereinbefore referred to, to the end that the matters in controversy between the two States might be settled in accordance with the suggestion of this Honorable Court, made in its opinion rendered March 6, 1911, as interpreted by its opinion rendered October 30, 1911, the Commonwealth of Virginia served notice of the present motion.

13. Your respondent further says that unless the said controversy is amicably adjusted and settled through the agency of its Commission, by negotiations with the Virginia Debt Commission, it will be powerless to do anything towards such adjustment and settlement, as its Legislature is not now in session and there is no officer, agent or representative of West Virginia empowered to adjust and settle said controversy or to conduct negotiations to that end, except said Commission provided for and appointed under and by virtue of said joint resolution; and it further represents that since the appointment of its said Commission, it has been relying upon it so to conduct negotiations with the Commonwealth of Virginia as to consummate such an adjustment and settlement of said controversy as to commend the result of its negotiations to the favorable consideration of the Governor and the legislative branch of its government, and thus terminate said controversy to the satisfaction of her people and the Commonwealth of Virginia, and upon the principles of honor and justice to both States, and in fairness to the holders of the debt for whose benefit this controversy is still pending.

14. In view, therefore, of the foregoing considerations, it is respectfully submitted that the motion of the complainant is premature, and ought not to prevail; that no further action should be taken by this Court until the West Virginia Commission has had a reasonable opportunity to present its intended proposition of settlement to the Virginia Commission.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA,

By A. A. LILLY,

Attorney General.

DEFENDANT'S EXHIBIT "A"

Proceedings of a Joint Conference

BETWEEN THE

VIRGINIA DEBT COMMISSIONS

OF THE

STATES OF VIRGINIA AND WEST VIRGINIA

HELD AT

THE NEW WILLARD HOTEL

WASHINGTON, D. C.,

July 25th and 26th, 1913

Proceedings of a Joint Conference of the Virginia and West Virginia Debt Commissions.

The Virginia and West Virginia Debt Commissions met in joint conference in the "Gridiron Room" of the New Willard Hotel at 11 o'clock a. m., July 25th, 1913, pursuant to call of their respective Chairmen and there were present:

On the part of Virginia:—Messrs. Moon, (Chairman) Harrison, Rhea, Wickham, Flood, Brown, Downing, and Joseph Button, Secretary.

On the part of West Virginia:—Messrs. Mason, (Chairman) Wells, Zilliken, Lenhart, Ice, Young, Chilton, Boreman, Hamilton, Ord, Miller, and John T. Harris, Secretary.

The Chairmen of the two Commissions presided jointly over the conference meeting.

CHAIRMAN MOON: On behalf of the Virginia Commission we have prepared some preliminary resolutions to see if we can get at an adjustment of this matter and try to reach an agreement. The first resolution we passed is this:

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this Commission that in the Conference to be held this day with the West Virginia Commission, the subject for consideration and adjustment, as indicated by the Court in its decision in this case, is the amount of interest which West Virginia should pay upon the sum ascertained by the court to be West Virginia's share of the principal of said debt."

CHAIRMAN MOON: The second resolution adopted by our Commission is as follows:

"This Commission desiring to carry out in good faith the suggestions made by the Supreme Court as to securing an amicable adjustment of the amount of interest which should be paid by West Virginia upon the principal of the debt as ascertained and decided by the court, and realizing that it is not the desire of Virginia nor was it the intention of the Supreme Court that Virginia should ask or demand the full or legal amount of interest upon the principal debt as ascertained in the decision of the Court, but that there should be concessions made upon both sides, such as comport with justice and the honor and dignity of the two States; and

WHEREAS, The joint conference to be held today between the Commissions of Virginia and West Virginia was invited by the authorities of West Virginia, presumably for the purpose of carrying out in good faith the decision and suggestion of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Therefore, be it resolved, That this resolution, together with all other resolutions adopted by this Commission at its present session, which may be pertinent, be presented by the Chairman of this Commission, to the Commission of West Virginia at the joint conference to be held today, and that the Commission of West Virginia be respectfully requested to communicate to this Commission, what, in their judgment, would be a fair and just settlement of the interest to be paid by West Virginia upon the principal amount as ascertained in the opinion and decision of the Supreme Court of the United States."

CHAIRMAN MOON: These two resolutions we lay before you, gentlemen, and ask your consideration of them. I will state that our Commission has designated Hon. Randolph Harrison, one of our members, to be spokesman for us and to give such advice as may be desirable to present to you. He has a great deal of information on the subject, and has had a great deal of experience in connection with the case, and is well qualified to submit it.

CHAIRMAN MASON: Under these resolutions you have presented, gentlemen, the only question for the West Virginia Commission to consider would be the question of interest. From our standpoint, and our reading of the opinion of the Supreme Court, other things are to be considered besides that question of interest.

This Commission has only been in existence about sixty days—or not quite that long; it was appointed on the 10th day of June—and we haven't had time on our part to go over this matter as fully as you gentlemen have who have been familiar with the case for many, many years. We have a general idea of the subject matter but have not studied it as we should study it and as we are endeavoring to study it.

We meet you with a great deal of pleasure, gentlemen, and with the sincere idea and desire that this long unsettled, vexed question between the two states may be settled. We think it ought to be settled in some way; but we have had the idea, and have it now, that the opinion of the Supreme Court leaves open more than the question of interest, or whether we should pay any interest whatever.

In the first place, it is not a final judgment; and in the second place the court indicates very clearly in its opinion that there may be adjustments to be made by the different parties; so that if you limit the discussion and the investigation simply to the question of interest, gentlemen, we will probably have some trouble right at the start, if more than that is not to be discussed and considered in attempting to make a settlement of this matter.

CHAIRMAN MOON: Mr. Chairman, do you think you will be ready to make any reply to these resolutions any time to-day, or would you want more time to consider them?

CHAIRMAN MASON: I think I can say for our Commission now, that we would want to consider, in this attempted settlement, more than the question of interest, or whether there is to be any interest, and, if so, the amount of it.

At their own request certain persons representing the certificate holders and bondholders were here admitted and were present at the meeting.

MR. FLOOD: As Mr. Harrison has been selected by our Commission as its spokesman, I think it would be well to hear from him.

Mr. Harrison then addressed the joint conference at considerable length upon the text of the resolutions adopted by the Virginia Commission as heretofore read by Chairman Moon and submitted to the West Virginia Commission.

After which the joint conference took a recess to reconvene at the call of the respective Chairmen, and the West Virginia Commission took time to consider the resolutions submitted by the Virginia Commission and recessed until 2 o'clock p. m.

AFTERNOON SESSION—WEST VIRGINIA COMMISSION.

The West Virginia Commission re-assembled in the "Cabinet Room" of the New Hotel Willard at 2 o'clock p. m., and after a full and free discussion of the resolutions submitted this morning by the Virginia Commission adopted the following:

REPLY OF THE WEST VIRGINIA COMMISSION TO THE VIRGINIA COMMISSION'S RESOLUTION NO. 1.

"The Debt Commission on the part of the State of West Virginia having this day been handed the following resolution adopted by the Debt Commission on the part of the State of Virginia:

'Resolved, That it is the sense of this Commission that in the conference to be held this day with the West Virginia Commission, the subject for consideration and adjustment, as indicated by the court in its decision in this case, is the amount of interest which West Virginia should pay upon the sum ascertained by the court to be West Virginia's share of the principal of said debt.'

In reply thereto says: that in its judgment the interst, if any, which should be paid to the State of Virginia as stated in the foregoing resolution, is not the only question, as indicated by the language used by the Supreme Court of the United States in its opinion, which the Joint Commission, now in session, should consider."

REPLY OF THE WEST VIRGINIA COMMISSION TO THE VIRGINIA COMMISSION'S RESOLUTION NO. 2.

"WHEREAS, The view of the Virginia Debt Commission on the part of West Virginia is that the present conference is for a preliminary discussion and exchange of views and for the added purpose of arranging a method for a more complete consideration of the matters involved, and adjusting a working programme; therefore be it Resolved, That the Virginia and West Virginia Commissions shall each appoint a sub-committee of three members, with instructions to confer at the earliest convenient time and place and to thoroughly discuss all matters involved, and endeavor to reach a final proposition that shall be submitted back to the two respective commissions, separately, for consideration by each, and for final determination at a joint conference to be subsequently arranged between the Chairmen of the two Committees; but nothing herein contained shall prejudice the rights of either party."

Mr. Young offered the following, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the Chairman of this Commission be directed to communicate these two resolutions to the Chairman of the Virginia Commission with the request that the Virginia Commission indicate, at as early an hour as possible, their acceptance or rejection of the second resolution we have adopted.

Subsequently, the Chairman reported to the Commission that he had performed the duty assigned him.

At the hour of 5:30 p. m. Mr. Moon, Chairman of the Virginia Commission, appeared and made the following statement:

"I am directed by the Virginia Commission to acknowledge the receipt of your communication, through the Chairman, and to say that we are now engaged in formulating a reply to it. We make the suggestion that we assemble in joint session at a quarter to 8 o'clock, if agreeable to your Commission."

Whereupon,

On motion of Mr. Chilton the Commission then took a recess until 7:45 o'clock p. m. to again go into joint session with the Virginia Commission.

Joint Conference—Evening Session.

The two Commissions re-convened in joint session in the "Cabinet Room" of the New Willard Hotel at 7:45 o'clock p. m., all the members being present and the Chairmen of the two Commissions jointly presiding.

CHAIRMAN MOON: Gentlemen of the West Virginia Commission: Our Commission has made the following reply to your resolutions, in writing, received by us this afternoon:

"The Virginia Commission, having received the following communications from the West Virginia Commission, numbered for convenience 1 and 2:

> '(1) The Debt Commission on the part of the State of West Virginia having this day been handed the following resolution adopted by the Debt Commission on the part of the State of Virginia:
> "Resolved, That it is the sense of this Commission that in the conference to be held this day with the West Virginia Commission, the subject for consideration and adjustment, as indicated by the court in its decision in this case, is the amount of interest which West Virginia should pay upon the sum ascertained by the court to be West Virginia's share of the principal of said debt."

In reply thereto says: That in its judgment the interest, if any, which should be paid to the State of Virginia as stated in the foregoing resolution, is not the only question, as indicated by the language used by the Supreme Court of the United States in its opinion, which the Joint Commission, now in session, should consider.

(2) WHEREAS, The view of the Virginia Debt Commission on the part of West Virginia is that the present conference is for preliminary discussion and exchange of views and for the added purpose of arranging a method for a more complete consideration of the matters involved, and adjusting a working programme; therefore be it

Resolved, That the Virginia and West Virginia Commissions shall each appoint a sub-committee, of three members, with instructions to confer at the earliest convenient time and place and to thoroughly discuss all matters involved, and endeavor to reach a final proposition that shall be submitted back to the two respective Commissions, separately, for consideration by each, and for final determination at a joint conference to be subsequently arranged between the Chairmen of the two Committees; but nothing herein contained shall prejudice the rights of either party.'

Respectfully replies that in its judgment the language of the Supreme Court does not admit of the foregoing construction to the effect that 'the interest, if any, is not the only question,' which the joint conference should consider.

The Court said: 'Among other things there still remains the question of interest.' The Virginia Commission understands this language to mean that there were 'other things' to be considered by the Court before it reached a final decree, and that among these other things the only one referred to the two States for adjustment was the question of interest.

The Virginia Commission, being of opinion that there is no abmbiguity in the opinion of the Court, and that no conference as to any other matter than the question of interest is called for between the two Commissions, respectfully adheres to the interpretation of the opinion and decision of the Court as expressed in its prior communication of this date, and as elaborated in the remarks of Mr. Randolph Harrison, before the joint session of the two Commissions.

It regrets, however, that the West Virginia Commission has not indicated, as they were requested to do, what questions other than the question of interest should be, in their judgment, considered by the two States.

The Virginia Commission further regrets that the West Virginia Commission has not seen fit to indicate or suggest an amount, the payment of which they would recommend as a final compromise and adjustment of the proportion of the debt to be borne by West Virginia, as the Virginia Commission specifically declared, through Mr. Harrison, that such proposal would receive most careful and respectful consideration if the West Virginia Commission saw fit to take up that subject.

Now, responding to the proposal of the West Virginia Commission that a sub-committee of three should be formed from each Commission, with instructions to consider all matters involved, and so forth, the Virginia Commission respectfully says that it is agreeable to the appointment of such sub-committees provided the matters to be considered by them are as indicated above, namely:

(1) The amount of interest which West Virginia should pay upon the sum ascertained by the Court in its decision to be West Virginia's share of the principal of the debt.

(2) Any proposal which West Virginia may deem proper to submit for the final compromise settlement of the proportion of the debt to be borne by West Virginia.

Provided, further, that said sub-committees be directed to meet on the ———— day of ————, 1913, and report to an adjourned meeting of this joint conference to be held on the ———— day of ————, 1913."

CHAIRMAN MASON: I take it, gentlemen, that that is only a qualified acceptance of the proposition made and that we would want to discuss it further as to whether or not we will want to eliminate from the report to be made by the sub-committee all questions except the payment of interest; and, further, that the proposition to pay a part shall come from West Virginia. That, I say, we will want to consider.

I hope, gentlemen, you will feel free to simply leave the question open so that the sub-committee when it meets may discuss it, and make such report as it shall deem proper, without your insisting upon your notion about it; but whether we want to appoint a sub-committee under those restrictions as you have them there, I will say that we shall have to have time to think about it. I regret very much that you limit it in that way.

CHAIRMAN MOON: We would suggest a separate session of the Commissions to give you an opportunity to consider that question.

CHAIRMAN MASON: Yes; it will take a few moments.

CHAIRMAN MOON: We will give you an opportunity to go into executive session to determine upon that point. Our Commission is up in Room 601, if you should want us.

Whereupon,

The Virginia Commission then retired, and after some time spent in discussion the West Virginia Commission formulated the following in response to the last foregoing communication:

"The West Virginia Commission has received the following statement from the Virginia Debt Commission:

'The Virginia Commission, having received the following communications from the West Virginia Commission, numbered for convenience 1 and 2:

"(1) The Debt Commission on the part of the State of West Virginia having this day been handed the following resolution adopted by the Debt Commission on the part of the State of Virginia:

'Resolved, That it is the sense of this Commission that in the conference to be held this day with the West Virginia Commission, the subject for consideration and adjustment, as indicated by the court in its decision in this case, is the amount of interest which West Virginia should pay upon the sum ascertained by the court to be West Virginia's share of the principal of said debt."

In reply thereto says: That in its judgment the interest, if any, which should be paid to the State of Virginia as stated in the foregoing resolution, is not the only question, as indicated by the language used by the Supreme Court of the United States in its opinion, which the Joint Commission, now in session, should consider.

(2) WHEREAS, The view of the Virginia Debt Commission on the part of West Virginia is that the present conference is for a preliminary discussion and exchange of views and for the added purpose of arranging a method for a more complete consideration of the matters involved, and adjusting a working programme; therefore be it

Resolved, That the Virginia and West Virginia Commissions shall each appoint a sub-committee of three members, with instructions to confer at the earliest convenient time and place and to thoroughly discuss all matters involved, and endeavor to reach a final proposition that shall be submitted back to the two respective commissions separately, for consideration by each, and for final determination at a joint conference to be subsequently arranged between the Chairmen of the two Committees; but nothing herein contained shall prejudice the rights of either party."

Respectfully replies that in its judgment the language of the Supreme Court does not admit of the foregoing construction to the effect that "the interest, if any, is not the only question," which the joint conference should consider.

The Court said: "Among other things there still remains the question of interest." The Virginia Commission understands this language to mean that there were "other things" to be considered by the Court before it reached a final decree, and that among these other things the only one referred to the two States for adjustment was the question of interest.

The Virginia Commission, being of opinion that there is no ambiguity in the opinion of the Court, and that no conference as to any other matter than the question of interest is called for between the two Commissions, respectfully adheres to the interpretation of the opinion and decision of the Court as expressed in its prior communication of this date, and as elaborated in the remarks of Mr. Randolph Harrison, before the joint session of the two Commissions.

It regrets, however, that the West Virginia Commission has not indicated, as they were requested to do, what questions other than the question of interest should be, in their judgment, considered by the two States.

The Virginia Commission further regrets that the West Virginia Commission has not seen fit to indicate or suggest an amount, the payment of which they would recommend as a final compromise and adjustment of the proportion of the debt to be borne by West Virginia, as the Virginia Commission specifically declared, through Mr. Harrison, that such proposal would receive most careful and respectful consideration, if the West Virginia Commission saw fit to take up that subject.

Now, responding to the proposal of the West Virginia Commission that a sub-committee of three should be formed from each Commission, with instructions to consider all matters involved, and so forth, the Virginia Commission respectfully says that it is agreeable to the appointment of such sub-committee, provided the matters to be considered by them are as indicated above, namely:

(1) The amount of interest which West Virginia should pay upon the sum ascertained by the Court in its decision to be West Virginia's share of the principal of the debt.

(2) Any proposal which West Virginia may deem proper to submit for the final compromise settlement of the proportion of the debt to be borne by West Virginia.

Provided, further, that said sub-committees be directed to meet on the ——— day of ———, 1913, and report to an adjourned meeting of this joint conference to be held on the ——— day of ———, 1913.'

And in reply to the last communication of the Virginia Debt Commission the West Virginia Debt Commission says that it is anxious to proceed with the negotiations but cannot consent to agree in advance that only the question of interest shall be considered, or that the West Virginia sub-committee shall be required to first submit a proposition looking to a settlement. This Commission is willing and anxious to approach a settlement upon equal terms, leaving, in the first instance, all questions of procedure to the said sub-committees.

This Committee did not understand the remarks made by Mr. Harrison today as a proposition. We considered only the written resolutions presented to us.

In reply to the remarks made by Mr. Harrison at the joint meeting today, and referred to in your communication, we would say that this Commission does not feel sufficiently acquainted with the questions involved—for reasons heretofore stated—to submit a proposition at this time, and asks that the whole subject matter be submitted to the sub-committees hereinbefore referred to, with the understanding that the said sub-committees be required to report their action for approval to their respective Commissions at a time in the near future to be now agreed upon."

On motion of Mr. Chilton the foregoing reply was made and the Chairman was directed to communicate it to the Virginia Debt Commission.

Subsequently, the Chairman reported that he had performed the mission assigned him.

Within a reasonable time after the delivery of the communication to the Virginia Commission the following reply was received through its Chairman, Mr. Moon:

"The Virginia Commission has given careful consideration to the last communication from the West Virginia Commission, stating, in effect, that the conference between the two Commissions must embrace a consideration de novo of the entire case, both as to the principal and interest involved.

The Virginia Commission for reasons heretofore repeatedly stated, feels constrained to decline the terms proposed by the West Virginia Commission as the basis upon which the conference must proceed."

On receipt of this reply the West Virginia Commission took the following action:

"Washington, D. C., July 25, 1913.

"The following communication was received from the Virginia Commission after 11 o'clock p. m.:

'The Virginia Commission has given careful consideration to the last communication from the West Virginia Commission, stating, in effect, that the conference between the two Commissions must embrace a consideration de novo of the entire case, both as to the principal and interest involved.

The Virginia Commission for reasons heretofore repeatedly stated feels constrained to decline the terms proposed by the West Virginia Commission as the basis upon which the conference must proceed.'

Pending a consideration of the communication Mr. Miller moved that owing to the lateness of the hour at which the communication was received, the further consideration of the same be postponed until tomorrow morning, July 26th, 1913, at 10 o'clock, and that the West Virginia Commission adjourn until that hour.

Which motion was put by the Chair and carried by unanimous vote of the Commission at 12 o'clock midnight, and the Chairman of the Virginia Commission was notified of the adjournment by the Chairman of the West Virginia Commission.

JOHN W. MASON,
Chairman.

JOHN T. HARRIS,
Secretary.

Washington, D. C., July 26, 1913.

The West Virginia Commission met at 10 o'clock a. m., in the "Cabinet Room" of the New Willard Hotel, pursuant to adjournment, and the Chairman and all the members of the Commission were present.

The following reply was made, through the Chairman, to the last communication received from the Virginia Commission last night:

"Washington, D. C., July 26, 1913.

"The Virginia Debt Commission on the part of the State of West Virginia received at 11:15 last night the following communication from the Virginia Commission:

'The Virginia Commission has given careful consideration to the last communication from the West Virginia Commission, stating, in effect, that the conference between the two Commissions must embrace a consideration de novo of the entire case, both as to the principal and interest involved.

The Virginia Commission for reasons heretofore repeatedly stated feels constrained to decline the terms proposed by the West Virginia Commission as the basis upon which the conference must proceed.'

In reply to the foregoing communication the West Virginia Commission regrets that the Virginia Commission has declined to submit the matters in question to a sub-committee, as heretofore proposed by the West Virginia Commission, and the West Virginia Commission now suggests that the two Commissions have a joint meeting on the ——— day of ——— at ——— for the purpose of further considering a settlement of West Virginia's proportion, if any, of the Virginia debt, proper to be borne by the State of West Virginia, and to arrive if possible at some adjustment thereof."

To which communication the following reply was received from the Virginia Commission, through Chairman Moon:

"The Virginia Commission have considered the suggestion of the West Virginia Commission for an adjournment of the conference between the two Commissions.

If it is the purpose of the West Virginia Commission to insist that the joint conference shall embrace a consideration de novo of the entire case, both as to principal and interest involved, then the Virginia Commission can perceive no advantage to result from further negotiations. The Virginia Commission cannot recede from their views as heretofore announced to the West Virginia Commission in respect to the matters to be embraced in the conference between the two Commissions.

With this understanding it consents to the adjournment of the conference to Tuesday, August 12, 1913, at 10 o'clock a. m., at the New Willard Hotel, Washington."

The West Virginia Commission made the following reply to the above communication:

"Washington, D. C., July 26, 1913.

"The West Virginia Commission acknowledge receipt of the communication from the Virginia Commission concurring in the suggested adjournment upon certain terms and conditions, which terms and conditions the West Virginia Commission declines to be bound by. We, however, agree to the time and place of adjournment suggested by you and insist that this adjournment shall be and is without terms or conditions and without prejudice to the rights of either party."

The Chairman was directed to deliver the foregoing communication to the Chairman of the Virginia Commission, and subsequently reported to this Commission that he had performed the duty assigned to him by delivering the same to the Hon. John B. Moon, Chairman of the Virginia Commission, the Virginia Commission not being in session, they having separated before that time, as Chairman Mason was informed.

No reply being received, after waiting a reasonable time, on motion the Commission adjourned to meet at the New Willard Hotel, in the city of Washington, on the 12th day of August, 1913, at 10 o'clock a. m.

JOHN W. MASON,
Chairman.

Secretary.

DEFENDANT'S EXHIBIT "B"

Record of the Proceedings

OF THE

VIRGINIA DEBT COMMISSION

ON THE PART OF

WEST VIRGINIA, AND OF ITS

SUB-COMMITTEE

RECORD OF PROCEEDINGS

On the 21st day of February, 1913, the Legislature of West Virginia adopted the following, as Conference Committee's Substitute for House Substitute for Senate Joint Resolution No. 5:

"Creating a commission known as the Virginia Debt Commission, to provide for arranging and settling with the commonwealth of Virginia the proper proportion of the public debt of the original commonwealth of Virginia, if any should be borne by West Virginia, to take into consideration all matters arising between the commonwealth of Virginia and the State of West Virginia in reference to said original public debt, and to report its proceedings to the Governor of the State.

"WHEREAS, The commonwealth of Virginia instituted a suit in the Supreme Court of the United States against the State of West Virginia, to have the State of West Virginia's proportion of the public debt of Virginia as it stood before one thousand eight hundred and sixty-one, ascertained and satisfied; and

"WHEREAS, At the October term, one thousand nine hundred and ten, the Supreme Court of the United States made a finding that the share of the principal debt of the original commonwealth of Virginia to be borne by the State of West Virginia, as seven million one hundred and eighty-two thousand, six hundred and seven dollars and forty-six cents; and

"WHEREAS, Said court did not fully and finally decide the question involved, but suggested that such proceedings and negotiations should be had between the states upon all the questions involved in said litigation, as might lead to a settlement of the same; therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate of West Virginia, the House of Delegates concurring therein:

"That a commission of eleven members, known as the Virginia Debt Commission, is hereby created. The members of said commission shall be appointed by the Governor, two of whom shall be chosen from each congressional district of the State, and one at large, not more than six of whom shall belong to any one political party, and all resignations or vacancies in the said commission as they occur shall be filled by the appointment of the Governor.

"Said Commission is authorized and directed to negotiate with the commonwealth of Virginia, or with any person or committee owning or holding any part of the said indebtedness for a settlement of West Virginia's proportion of the debt of the original commonwealth of Virginia proper to be borne by the State of West Virginia.

"The Commission is hereby directed to ascertain and report upon and give the utmost publicity to all the facts in relation to the pending suit instituted against the State of West Virginia, which is owned or held or claimed to be due, at law or in equity, by the commonwealth of Virginia in her own right; and having made the investigation required hereby, said commission is authorized and directed to negotiate with the commonwealth of Virginia for a settlement of West Virginia's proportion of the debt of the original commonwealth of Virginia proper to be borne by the State of West Virginia.

"A majority of said Commission shall have authority to act. The Commission shall choose its chairman and appoint its secretary and other necessary officers.

"The expenses properly incurred by the Commission and its individual members, including compensation of said members at the rate of ten dollars per day for the time actually employed, shall be paid by the State out of the moneys appropriated for said purpose.

"The Commission shall make a report to the Governor as soon as practicable, and upon receipt of said report the Governor shall convene the Legislature for the consideration of the same.

"The Commission is hereby authorized to sit within or without the State and to send for papers and records and to examine witnesses under oath."

In pursuance of the authority vested in him by the foregoing resolution His Excellency, H. D. Hatfield, Governor, made the following appointments of members of the Virginia Debt Commission:

First Congressional District—John W. Mason, of Fairmont; Henry Zilliken, Wellsburg.

Second Congressional District—J. A. Lenhart, Kingwood; W. T. Ice, Philippi.

Third Congressional District—U. G. Young, Buckhannon; Joseph E. Chilton, Charleston.

Fourth Congressional District—R. J. A. Boreman, Parkersburg; John M. Hamilton, Grantsville.

Fifth Congressional District—W. D. Ord, Landgraff; Joseph S. Miller, Kenova.

At Large—W. E. Wells, Newell.

In obedience to a call of the Governor the Commission met in the capitol at the city of Charleston on Tuesday, the 10th day of June, 1913, and there were present: Mr. W. E. Wells, member-at-large; and Messrs. Mason, Zilliken, Lenhart, Ice, Young, Chilton, Boreman, Hamilton, and Miller, representing their respective districts as above noted.

Absent: Mr. W. D. Ord.

On motion of Mr. Hamilton, Hon. John W. Mason was elected Chairman of the Commission, by acclamation.

On motion of Mr. Boreman, Mr. John T. Harris was appointed Secretary.

The oath of office was administered to all the members present, and to the Secretary, by John C. Bond, a Notary Public within and for the county of Kanawha.

His Excellency, Governor Hatfield, and Attorney General Lilly, upon invitation addressed the Commission briefly as to matters it would be called upon to consider, and each gave assurances that he was ready to render all the assistance he could to further the work of the Commission. The Governor also stated that he would communicate with the Governor of Virginia and notify him of the meeting and organization of this Commission.

On motion of Mr. Young the Secretary was directed to extend an invitation to Ex-Governor W. M. O. Dawson and to Mr. George McClintic, of counsel on behalf of the defendant in the case of Virginia vs. West Virginia, pending in the Supreme Court of the United States, to meet the Commission in executive session at 2 o'clock this afternoon and give such information as they may have in relation to the status of the Virginia debt case, and answer any questions that the Commission may desire to propound.

Upon the further motion of the same gentleman a recess was then taken until 2 o'clock p. m.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Commission reconvened at 2 o'clock p. m., all the members being present but Mr. Ord.

In response to the invitation extended under the resolution proposed by Mr. Young this morning, Ex-Governor Dawson spoke briefly of his connection with the case of Virginia vs. West Virginia, and suggested that if the members of the Commission would read the briefs of counsel on final hearing, they would no doubt be better able to familiarize themselves with the case than in any other way.

Mr. McClintic spoke at length, giving a history of the case in its various stages from his earliest connection with it down to the time of the final hearing. He also quoted extensively from the record and answered many questions propounded to him by members of the Commission.

Mr. Young offered the following:

Resolved, That a sub-committee of three be appointed to ascertain and report at the next meeting of the Commission:

First—The status of the accounts between Virginia and West Virginia based upon the several theories of settlement which have been suggested as the proper basis of adjustment.

Second—The status of the accounts as shown by the Debt Commission of 1871.

Third—The status of the account as shown by the Senate Finance Committee of West Virginia of 1873.

Fourth—Which account, in their opinion, is the nearest correct and equitable, and their reasons therefor, and if none meets their views, to make up and report one of their own, with their reasons in support thereof.

Fifth—An outline of further procedure on the part of the Commission.

Sixth—Such other matters as they deem pertinent and proper.

The question being upon the adoption of the resolution, the same was propounded by the Chair and did not prevail, the vote being Ayes 4, Noes 5.

On motion it was Ordered, That the Secretary be authorized and directed to have printed all necessary stationery for the use of the Commission and to provide a book in which the minutes of the meetings of the Commission shall be kept; also a book of blank warrants for the per diem and expenses of the members and any employes. It was further Ordered, That all warrants shall be signed by the Chairman and Secretary.

On motion of Mr. Wells, the Commission then adjourned to meet at Charleston on Tuesday, July 22, 1913, at 10 o'clock a. m.

JOHN W. MASON,
Chairman.

JOHN T. HARRIS,
Secretary.

Charleston, West Va., July 22, 1913.

The Commission met pursuant to the adjournment of June 10th, and there were present Messrs. Mason, (Chairman) Wells, Zilliken, Lenhart, Young, Chilton, Boreman, Hamilton, Ord and Miller.

Absent: Mr. Ice.

The oath of office was administered to Mr. Ord, (who was not present at the organization meeting) by John C. Bond, Notary Public.

The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved.

On motion of Mr. Zilliken the following was adopted:

Resolved, That a sub-committee of three be appointed by the Chair, whose duty it shall be to discover, if possible, the ownership of the Virginia Debt Certificates, and report the same to this Commission at a subsequent meeting.

Whereupon, the Chair appointed as members of the sub-committee Messrs. Zilliken, Wells and Young.

On motion the Commission then took a recess until 2 o'clock this p. m.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Commission re-convened at 2 o'clock, all the members being present but Mr. Ice.

The Chair submitted to the Commission a proposition to meet the Virginia Debt Commission, in conference, at the New Willard Hotel, in the city of Washington, on Friday, the 25th instant.

Pending a discussion of which Mr. Ord offered the following:

Resolved, That we ask the Virginia Commission to give us more time in which to acquaint ourselves with the facts of the case of the State of Virginia against West Virginia.

The question being upon the adoption of the resolution the same was propounded by the Chair and the resolution was lost.

Messrs. Ord and Boreman requested that the record show that they voted in favor of the resolution.

Those who voted against it explained their votes by saying that as the time of the Washington conference had already been fixed by the Chairmen of the two Commissions, they did not deem it either wise or expedient to attempt a cancellation of the engagement, and that if the meeting resulted in nothing else, it would give the members of this Commission an opportunity to meet the members of the Virginia Commission and to become personally acquainted with them.

The question recurring upon the proposition to meet the Virginia Debt Commission, in conference, in the city of Washington on the 25th, after a further discussion of the matter it was decided that this Commission would attend the meeting and would leave the city of Charleston at 6:45 p. m. of the 23rd.

The question of counsel for the Commission coming up for consideration, Governor Hatfield being present explained that the Board of Public Works had made arrangements with Mr. Charles Edgar Hogg—in view of his previous connection with the debt case as counsel on behalf of the State, and of the fees that he had received—to contribute his legal services to this Commission without expense to it; which tender was accepted by the Commission.

On motion of Mr. Miller, Mr. George McClintic, one of counsel previously employed by the State in the case, was extended an invitation to accompany the Commission on its trip to Washington, on the basis of his actual expenses, to be paid out of the funds of the Commission, but no additional compensation to be paid him.

Subsequently, Mr. McClintic appeared before the Commission and after the resolution had been explained to him, stated that while he had been employed in the case, and had received compensation from the State, he felt that he had rendered services to cover the full amount of all money paid him, but that under the circumstances he would be willing to accompany the Commission on its trip to Washington on the basis of his actual expenses as proposed, but that he did not wish his action to be considered a precedent if any further services were required of him.

On motion, the Commission then adjourned until to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock.

JOHN W. MASON,
Chairman.

JOHN T. HARRIS,
Secretary.

Charleston, West. Va., July 23, 1913.

The Commission met pursuant to adjournment of yesterday.

Present: Messrs. Mason, (Chairman) Wells, Zilliken, Lenhart, Young, Chilton, Boreman, Hamilton, Ord and Miller.

Absent: Mr. Ice.

The minutes of the meeting of yesterday were read and approved.

(A paragraph here omitted refers to an account rendered by the Secretary for services and expenses, and the allowance of the same by the Commission.)

Mr. Hogg appeared before the Commission and in an informal way gave his views of certain matters involved in the debt suit, and stated that he would prepare and submit to the Commission at a later date a paper that might be of benefit to it in its future deliberations.

On motion the Commission then adjourned to meet in Washington to-morrow, July 24th, upon the call of the Chairman.

Chairman.

JOHN T. HARRIS,
Secretary.

Washington, D. C., July 24, 1913.

The Commission left Charleston at 6:45 last evening and arrived at Washington at 7:30 this morning. Headquarters were established at the New Willard Hotel.

Upon the call of the Chairman a meeting was held in the "Gridiron Room" at 11 o'clock a. m., at which all the members were present with the exception of Mr. Ice.

United States Senator William E. Chilton appeared before the Commission in response to an invitation of the Chairman, and spoke briefly of the work it had in hand.

At the noon hour a recess was taken until 3 o'clock p. m., to meet in the Census Committee Room of the United States Senate, at the capitol, upon the invitation of Senator Chilton, Chairman of that Committee.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Commission met, pursuant to the recess motion, at 3 o'clock, all the members being present but Mr. Ice.

Hon. William E. Chilton, United States Senator, Congressmen John W. Davis of the First Congressional District of West Virginia, William G. Brown of the Second Congressional District, and Hunter H. Moss of the Fourth Congressional District met with the Commission. Word was received from Senator Goff that he regretted his inability to attend, but that he would meet the Commission at 10 o'clock to-morrow morning at the New Willard Hotel. After an extended informal discussion of various questions involved in the debt case, an adjournment was had until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning at the New Willard Hotel.

JOHN W. MASON,
Chairman.

JOHN T. HARRIS,
Secretary.

Washington, D. C., July 25, 1913.

The Commission met pursuant to the adjournment of yesterday, all the members being present. Complying with an invitation heretofore extended him, United States Senator Nathan Goff met with the Commission, discussing the status of the case of Virginia vs. West Virginia and giving his views upon many questions involved in and arising out of the same. At the hour of 10:55 a. m., the Chairman announced that at 11 o'clock the Commissions from the two states would meet in conference.

JOHN W. MASON,
Chairman.

JOHN T. HARRIS,
Secretary.

Charleston, West Va., August 11, 1913.

Pursuant to a call of the Chairman the Commission met in the Governor's Reception Room, at the capitol, in the city of Charleston, on this day, at 10 o'clock a. m.

Present: Messrs. Mason, (Chairman,) Boreman, Zilliken, Hamilton, Young, Lenhart, Ord, Ice, Chilton, Wells and Miller, being all the members of the Commission. Also, Attorney General Lilly, Associate Counsel Hogg and the Secretary.

The minutes of the Washington meetings were read and approved.

CHAIRMAN MASON: After our meeting at Washington I learned through letters received from various members of the Commission, and otherwise, that this Commission would not be ready to meet with the Virginia Commission, at Washington, on the 12th day of August, pursuant to the adjournment of July 26th; and not desiring to put the members of the Virginia Commission to the inconvenience of going to Washington unless they desired to go, I sent the following telegram to the Hon. John B. Moon, Chairman of the Virginia Commission:

"Fairmont, West Va., Aug. 9, 1913.

"Hon. John B. Moon,
Charlottesville, Va.

Certain our Debt Commission will not be ready for meeting Tuesday. Members have not had time enough for investigation. We meet Charleston Monday and will have to ask that time be extended to a day in near future. Under these circumstances I suggest Washington meeting be now re-called. (Signed)

JOHN W. MASON."

On the same day that telegram was sent, I also wrote and mailed to Mr. Moon a letter of which this is a copy:

"August 9, 1913.

Hon. John B. Moon,
Charlottesville, Va.

Dear Sir:

Since returning from Washington the members of the West Virginia Debt Commission have been diligently investigating the problem submitted to them by the Legislature. They find that there are many things to be considered before we can have an intelligent settlement. You must bear in mind this Commission is composed of men who knew comparatively little of the subject and none of the members had ever studied the question in detail. Hence, we find that it will be utterly impossible to resume negotiations on the 12th of August as intended when we separated at Washington. Therefore, I today sent you the following day letter telegram:

'Certain our Debt Commission will not be ready for meeting Tuesday. Members have not had time enough for investigation. We meet Charleston Monday and will have to ask that time be extended to a day in near future. Under these circumstances I suggest Washington meeting be now recalled.'

You will readily understand, I think, the magnitude of work before this Commission. In the first place you are no doubt aware that the people of West Virginia never considered that they owe anything, or, if anything, a very small amount. As indicating the sentiment of West Virginia I here quote a resolution adopted by the Constitutional Convention in 1872, offered by its Ex-Judge Samuel Woods, of Barbour County, as follows:

'Resolved, That there exists no just, legal or equitable claim against the State of West Virginia for the payment of any portion of the public debt of Virginia and that the existing provision on that subject in our present constitution ought no longer to exist.'

Judge Woods was a very prominent man at the time and had been a member of the Virginia Convention of 1861, and sympathized with the South and remained at or near Richmond during the entire war. He cannot be accused of having any prejudice against the old State. He was a man of large means, took great interest in public matters and served a long time as one of the judges of our Supreme Court.

In pursuance of this resolution that Convention did eliminate from the Constitution of 1863 Section 8, Article 8, which was the article authorizing the payment of our part of the Virginia debt, and the present Constitution, adopted in 1872, less than ten years after the organization of the State, not only ignores the payment of this debt, but by references to this history inferentially declares against it. I refer to these things to indicate the trouble there will be in convincing the people of West Virginia that they owe anything on account of this debt. This Committee having been appointed by the Legislature to inquire into and negotiate upon this subject, are exceedingly anxious to do so as intelligently as possible and without any references to preconceived notions except so far as the opinions formed at the time of the formation of the State, by men familiar with all the facts, may be regarded as correct. You, together with the members of your Commission, have gone over these questions fully and have had years of experience in acquiring the facts. We have had less than 60 days. We take it that before a satisfactory conclusion can be reached that we shall have to verify many statements, accounts and facts upon which the correct conclusion rests. This being a public matter and our duties being only advisory, we would not feel that we have done our duty to the public, should we make a proposition, accept or reject one, without giving a reason therefor at least satisfactory to ourselves. I beg to assure you that we will pursue our investigations as rapidly as possible and as soon as we feel that we are prepared to talk the matter over with you intelligently, we will ask you to call your Commission together for that purpose. I hope this will be in the near future.

Very respectfully ours,

JOHN W. MASON.

(Signed)

JWM/S

To which telegram and letter no replies were received. Thereupon, The Commission directed Chairman Mason to call Mr. Moon by long distance telephone and inquire whether or not he had received the telegram, and what was the pleasure of the Virginia Commission.

Mr. Moon was called and replied to Chairman Mason that immediately upon receipt of the telegram of August 9th he had notified the members of the Virginia Commission that there would be no meeting at Washington on the 12th of August, and Chairman Mason suggested to Chairman Moon that a time be fixed for another meeting in the near future, and that the time be arranged by the Chairmen of the two Commissions, which was assented to by Mr. Moon.

On motion the Commission then took a recess until 1:30 p. m.

AFTERNOON SESSION

The Commission re-assembled at 1:30 o'clock p. m., all the members being present, together with Attorney General Lilly and Associate Counsel Hon. Charles Edgar Hogg.

Mr. Lilly read a paper prepared by Mr. Hogg and himself, supplementary to a former statement submitted by them for the use of the Commission, "On the Debt Case, together with Conclusions Deducible from the Opinion of the Court, rendered on what is Denominated a Final Hearing of the Case," also, another paper giving "Reasons why the Proportion of the Debt of Virginia to be assumed by West Virginia should be ascertained by the method prescribed by Section 9 of the Ordinance adopted in August, 1861."

Following the reading of the papers there was a discussion of the same by Messrs. Wells, Hamilton, Young, Lenhart and other members of the Commission, after which Mr. Wells offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That a sub-committee consisting of Messrs. Ord, Young and Ice is hereby appointed to co-operate with the Attorney General and the associate counsel in this case, in drawing up the necessary data and statistics as a basis for propositions to be made to the Virginia Commission, and that either one, two or all of said sub-committee, at their convenience, are authorized to perform the work assigned them in connection with this matter.

On motion of Mr. Wells the Commission then adjourned to meet at the call of the Chairman.

Proceedings of the Sub-Committee

Charleston, West Va., August 11, 1913.

The sub-committee created by the resolution adopted by the Virginia Debt Commission at its meeting this day, met at 7 o'clock p. m., at the office of the Attorney General, in the capitol building, in the city of Charleston, to consider the duties imposed upon it by virtue of said resolution.

All the members of the sub-committee were present; also, Attorney General Lilly and Associate Counsel Hogg.

Thereupon, Mr. W. D. Ord was elected Chairman of said sub-committee.

After a general discussion of the duties of the sub-committee, on motion an adjournment was had until to-morrow morning, August 12, at 9 o'clock.

WILLIAM D. ORD,
Chairman Sub-Committee.

JOHN T. HARRIS,
Secretary.

Charleston, West Va., August 12, 1913.

The sub-committee met pursuant to adjournment of last night, all the members and the Attorney General and Associate Counsel being present. Further discussion was had as to matters and things that should be considered by this sub-committee, the members of the subcommittee agreeing upon the respective investigations to be made, after which an adjournment was had to meet in the near future, at the call of the Chairman.

WILLIAM D. ORD,
Chairman Sub-Committee.

JOHN T. HARRIS,
Secretary.

Charleston, West Va., Sept. 18, 1913.

The sub-committee appointed under the resolution adopted August 11th, 1913, met in the city of Charleston, pursuant to call, on the 18th day of September, 1913, and there were present: Messrs. Ord, (Chairman) Young and Ice; also, Attorney General Lilly and the Secretary of the Commission.

Considerable time was spent in a discussion of the methods to be pursued in securing the necessary data and statistics upon which to base propositions to be made to the Virginia Commission.

The Chairman stated that he had been in conference with the Governor, the Board of Public Works and counsel representing West Virginia, and that it was unanimously agreed by them that in order to make an intelligent and proper offer to the Virginia Commission with reference to a settlement of West Virginia's proportion, if any, of the public debt proper to be borne, as based upon the suggestions contained in the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States of the 6th day of March, 1911, that it would be necessary to obtain certain data, facts and information not disclosed in the present record, and that it would probably require further investigation by accountants; and it being represented to this sub-committee by the Board of Public Works that it is willing to secure such data and information upon which to predicate propositions of settleement as aforesaid, and that it will secure such data and information and furnish the same at the earliest practicable date, which will probably be within two or three months, the sub-committee expressed its desire to receive any and all information upon which an adjustment can be properly predicated.

The following preamble and resolution were offered by Mr. Young and adopted:

> WHEREAS, The sub-committee of the West Virginia Commission of the Virginia Debt Commission appointed to formulate a proposition of settlement to be submitted to the Virginia Commission, find it necessary to ascertain certain facts and figures not in the record and not available from the record, which will take some time; therefore be it

Resolved, That the Hon. John W. Mason, Chairman of the West Virginia Commission, be requested to inform the Virginia Commission, by a letter directed to its Chairman, Mr. Moon, that we are diligently at work on a proposition to be submitted to the Virginia Commission, but that further time will be needed to complete it.

Whereupon, the Chairman of this sub-committee addressed the following communication to the Chairman of the Commission:

"Charleston, West Va., Sept. 18, 1913.

Hon. John W. Mason,
Chairman,
Fairmont, West Virginia.

Dear Sir:

I enclose copy of a resolution adopted by our sub-committee today. Also, draft of a letter to Mr. Moon, which you can sign and mail to him if it meets with your approval.

Yours truly,

(Signed) W. D. ORD.
Chairman Sub-Committee."

The draft of the letter to Mr. Moon above referred to is as follows:

"Fairmont, West Virginia, September 22, 1913.

Hon. J. B. Moon,
Chairman Virginia Debt Commission,
Charlottesville, Virginia.

My Dear Sir:

I am instructed by a sub-committee of the West Virginia Commission, appointed by the Governor of that State to negotiate a settlement, in accordance with the suggestions of the Supreme Court of the United States, of the controversy between the States of Virginia and West Virginia relative to the settlement of the Virginia debt, to say to you, and through you to the Virginia Commission, that the West Virginia Commission has in course of preparation a proposition (looking to a settlement) to be presented to your Commission at the earliest moment; but that it will yet require some three or four months time in which to put said proposition in final and intelligent form. I cordially endorse the recommendation of the sub-committee and hope it will be agreeable to your committee to consider the same favorably.

In the meantime, if your Commission should desire to submit any suggestions or propositions to this Commission, looking to the same end, we would gladly and without unnecessary delay consider the same.

With great respect, I remain,

Yours, etc.,

Chairman West Virginia Commission.

Secretary.

The sub-committee then adjourned to meet at the call of the Chairman, with the understanding that each member should diligently continue his investigations under the resolution raising this sub-committee.

Chairman Sub-Committee.

Secretary.

ORIGINAL NO. ———.

Commonwealth of Virginia

vs.)

State of West Virginia.

To the Honorable, the Chief Justice and the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States:

Your petitioner, the State of West Virginia, one of the United State of America, by William M. O. Dawson, Governor, and Clark W. May, Attorney General, humbly prays leave to file the sworn demurrer herewith presented, to the bill of complaint in the above entitled cause.

It is humbly submitted that, by an examination of the bill of complaint in this cause, it will be observed that there is nothing in said bill contained showing a controversy between said Commonwealth of Virginia and said State of West Virginia justiciable in this court.

Wherefore, your petitioner humbly prays leave to file her said demurrer, and that a day may be fixed by your Honors for the hearing of the same.

And as in duty bound your petitioner will ever pray.

In the Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1906.

ORIGINAL NO. ——.

vs.)

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA.

The demurrer of the State of West Virginia, defendant above named, by William M. O. Dawson, Governor, and Clark W. May, Attorney General of said State of West Virginia, to the bill of complaint of the Commonwealth of Virginia, complainant, by William A. Anderson, Attorney General of said Commonwealth of Virginia.

The defendant, the State of West Virginia, above named, not confessing or acknowledging all or any of the matters and things in the said complainant's bill to be true in such manner and form as the same are set forth and alleged, or in any way or manner, demurs thereto, and for the cause of demurrer shows:

First: The jurisdiction of this Court does not extend to the character of demands, alleged in the bill in this cause, being in substance simple demands for money, and this Court could not enforce a judgment for money against one of the sovereign states of the Union of the United States in any way or manner.

Second: The bill on its face shows that the said Commonwealth of Virginia has no suable interest in the demands for money set out therein which would entitle her to the relief prayed for therein, and that the said demands if recovered would be only for the benefit of certain individuals, who are the holders of the alleged evidences of debt mentioned in said bill.

Third: The bill on its face shows that so far as said Commonwealth of Virginia may have any ownership of any of such alleged evidences of debt, the acts of the Legislature of said Commonwealth, claimed by the said Attorney General thereof as authority to institute this cause, do not in fact authorize any suit therefor to be instituted, but only authorize, if any authority at all is given, action on the part of the Commission in said bill mentioned and said Attorney General for the benefit and at the expense of the individuals in the bill and exhibits called "Certificate holders," which is in effect giving the use of the name of said Commonwealth to such "Certificate holders" for the purpose of attempting to collect their alleged private money demands against said State of West Virginia.

Fourth: The said bill does not sufficiently and definitely set out therein the alleged demands for money claimed therein, so that a complete and proper answer can be made thereto.

Wherefore, and for divers other good causes of demurrer in the said bill, this defendant demurs thereto and humbly demands the judgment of this Court whether she shall be compelled to make any further or other answer to the said bill, and prays to be hence dismissed with her costs and charges in the matter most wrongfully sustained.

Governor of West Virginia.

Attorney General of West Virginia.

State of West Virginia,
County of Kanawha, ss.

This day there personally appeared before me, the undersigned Clerk of the Supreme Court of Appeals of the State of West Virginia, William M. O. Dawson, Governor of said State, and Clark W. May, Attorney General of said State, representing the said State of West Virginia, the defendant in the above entitled cause, and whose names as such are signed to the foregoing demurrer, and being by me duly sworn, say that they are respectively the officers of the defendant, the said State of West Virginia, as above set out, and that the foregoing demurrer is not interposed for delay and that the same is true in point of fact.

Given under my hand as Clerk of said Court and the official seal thereof ——— day of October, 1906.

Clerk of the Supreme Court of Appeals of the State of West Virginia.

I, Clark W. May, Attorney General of the State of West Virginia, hereby certify that in my opinion the foregoing demurrer is well founded in point of law.

Attorney General of West Virginia

Supreme Court of the United States,

OCTOBER TERM, 1906.

COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA vs. STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA.	ORIGINAL NO. 7.

SUPPLEMENTAL BRIEF ON THE DEMURRER.

The evident purpose of the Virginia funding act of March 30, 1871, was to settle with the creditors for the full amount which the State had decided was her just share of the old public debt, and every creditor who surrendered his original bond for cancellation under the provisions of that act understood that he was being paid in the new bond all that the State recognized her obligation to pay. By presenting his bond for cancellation as required by the statute, and by accepting the certificate representing the remaining one-third, he necessarily released the State from any further pecuniary liability to him; for all the State agreed to do—if the language of the certificate constitutes an agreement—was, that the unfunded one-third "will be provided for in accordance "with such settlement as shall hereafter be had between "the States of Virginia and West Virginia in regard to "the public debt of the State of Virginia at the time of "its dismemberment." Both the act and the certificate issued under it provided that the State should hold the cancelled bonds in trust for the owners of the certificate (Record, pp. 15; 47-48).

The settlement referred to was to be made between the two States alone, and the essence of the agreement was that if anything should be received from West Virginia the holders of the certificates should have the benefit of it to the extent of their ratable shares. If Virginia had been suable, no action could have been thereafter maintained against her on this agreement unless she had actually received money in a settlement with West Virgina. Money so received would have been held in trust by the State for the certificate holders; and she now sues in that capacity for their exclusive benefit.

Unless Virginia has a valid claim in her own right against West Virginia for contribution independently of her transactions with the creditors, she cannot maintain this action. It certainly cannot be said that the issue of certificates to which West Virginia was not a party could confer upon Virginia a greater or more perfect right with respect to the unfunded one-third than she would have otherwise possessed; and, in fact, it is conceded by counsel that the liability of West Virginia is in no way affected by the issuance of the certificates. Although counsel insist that Virginia was not released from pecuniary liability under the act of 1871, yet the Attorney General, in his reply brief, says:

> "While the creditor, as the result of this arrange> "ment, took the risk of such a settlement ever being > "made, it was none the less the duty of Virginia to > "do all that she could, or all that could be reasonable > "and fairly expected of her, to bring about and effect
> "such a settlement; and, her repeated efforts to that > "end having proved abortive by reason of the failure > "of West Virginia to meet her overtures, this suit
> "has become necessary."

The next funding act was passed March 28, 1879. It provided for the surrender and cancellation of the outstanding bonds and for the issue of certificates, and expressly declared that "The acceptance of said certificates "for West Virginia's one-third issued under this act shall "be taken and held as a full and absolute release of the "State of Virginia for all liability on account of said "certificates" (Record, p. 19). Notwithstanding this plain provision of the act, it is contended in one of the reply briefs that Virginia was not released from liability for the sums represented by the certificates issued under it. Of course, it was not necessary to provide that the State should be released from any part of the old bonds, because they had all been surrendered to her and cancelled, and no longer constituted, even apparently, an obligation upon her part.

The next act, which was passed February 14, 1882, also provided for the surrender and cancellation of the outstanding bonds, and for the issue of certificates for the unfunded one-third, "to be accounted for by the State of "West Virginia without recourse upon this commonwealth" (Record, pp. 28-29).

The next and last funding act was passed February 20, 1892, and it also required the surrender and cancellation of the outstanding bonds and the issue of certificates for the unfunded portion "to be accounted for to the holder "of this certificate by the State of West Virginia without "recourse upon this commonwealth" (Record, p. 30).

The foregoing references to the statutes show the relation which the State of Virginia bore to the unfunded part of the debt when the joint resolution of March 6, 1894, was passed constituting a commission to negotiate with West Virginia, upon the express condition, however, that it should "in no event enter into any negotiations "thereunder except upon the basis that Virginia is bound "only for two-thirds of the debt of the original State, "which she has already provided for as her equitable pro-"portion thereof" (Record, p. 40).

This was followed by the act of March 6, 1900, which authorized the commission to take the certificates on deposit "upon an agreement and contract on the part of the "holders of said certificates that if the said commission "would secure a settlement with West Virginia with respect to said certificates, the holders of said certificates "so deposited will accept the amount realized on such "settlement from West Virginia on said certificates as a "full settlement of all their claims thereunder" (Record, p. 42). And it was further provided that the commission, with the advice and approval of the Attorney General, might take such action and institute such proceedings "on behalf of the State" as might in their judgment be needful and proper to "bring about and carry into effect a settlement as aforesaid;" but it was expressly provided that the owners of the certificates should defray all the expenses involved in connection with the proceedings "and the State shall not be subject to any expense on that account" (Record, .pp. 42).

The contracts exhibited with the bill, which are set forth in full in our original brief, show that the holders of the certificates which were deposited with the commission agreed to all the terms and conditions of the acts last referred to; and the record shows that before the institution of this suit certificates to the amount of $13,-173,435.41 had been deposited with the commission. Of this amount $10,851,294.09 were issued under the act of 1871 (Record, p. 89). Certificates held by the State of Virginia or by the commissioners of the sinking fund and literary fund amounting to $2,745,462.01 have not been deposited, of which $2,578,518.68 were issued under the act of 1871 (Record, p. 90). If Virginia owes any part of the debt represented by these certificates, she owes it to herself on acount of obligations created for her own exclusive benefit, and West Virginia could in no event be responsible for any part of it.

The dissenting opinion of Judge Staples in the case of Antoni vs. Wright, 22 Grattan (62 Va.), p. 838, and the cases of Higginbotham vs. Commonwealth, 25 Grattan (66 Va.), p. 628, and Greenhow vs. Vashon, 81 Va., 341 are cited by counsel in support of their contention that Virginia was not released by the act of 1871 from the obligation to pay the unfunded one-third of the debt. But an examination of the cases shows that no such question was involved, or could have been involved, in either of them.

In Antoni vs. Wright, decided in 1872, the question was as to the constitutionality of the Virginia act of 1872, repealing the provision of the act of March 30, 1871, which made the coupons receivable for taxes. The court, in a very able opinion, held that the repealing act was unconstitutional. Anderson, J., in delivering a concurring opinion, said:

> "It matters not whether the State is released from "the one-third of the debt or not; if a new bond had "been given for the whole of the debt, it would have "been a valid obligation for a valuable consideration. "Whether the State is released or not for one-third "of the debt, it is very clear that in this transaction "she has only assumed to pay two-thirds of it. And "I could not say that she is bound for any more. "That question, though one of great interest to the "State, is not involved in this case" (p. 873).

We call the attention of the court also to what was said by the court on page 840 of the report.

In Higginbotham vs. Commonwealth, decided in 1874, the question was whether the State was bound under certain acts of the legislature to pay dividends on the stock of the James River & Kanawha Company. It was contended by the Attorney General for the State that the two States were bound ratably to the stockholders for the dividends agreed to be paid, and that Virginia was, therefore, released from one-third of it by the dismemberment. The court expressed the opinion that they were bound ratably, but that Virginia was not released, and, speaking of the State's attitude, said:

> "By the payment of the whole debt, an equity at "once arises in her favor to demand contribution "from the other State which she may enforce in the "United States Courts; a right secured to States but "denied to individuals. She cannot suffer, there- "fore, by doing right. Virginia has not lost her "identity by the loss of forty-eight counties and the "inhabitants thereof."

In the course of its opinion, the court further said:

> "It is scarcely necessary to add that in what has "been said above it had not been my purpose to ex- "press or intimate any opinion as to the respective "rights and liabilities of the State and those of her "creditors who have accepted the provisions of the "act of March 30, 1871, commonly called the funding "act. That question is not before us, even inci- "dentally, and no opinion is expressed thereon." (p. 636.)

There had been no adjustment between the State and the stockholders who sued in that action, as there had been with the holders of the old public debt, and therefore there was no foundation for the claim that the State had been released from any part of the liability for dividends. The position assumed by the court that West Virginia was liable directly to the creditors for her just proportion of the debt is not insisted upon by counsel in this case. On the contrary, it is conceded that if West Virginia is liable for contribution, it is to Virginia alone.

In 1886, when the case of Greenhow vs. Vashon was decided, the entire personnel of the court had been changed as a result of the controversy over the readjustment of the public debt. It was a proceeding to compel the treasurer of the State to receive coupons in payment of taxes, and the court held that he could not be compelled to do so because the funding act of March 30, 1871, was unconstitutional and void!

We think it is clear that Virginia has been released by the provisions contained in the various funding acts, by the surrender and cancellation of the bonds, by the acceptance of certificates under the acts, and by the contracts entered into between the creditors and the commissions; but, even if there had been no formal or voluntary release, the State has repeatedly declared in the funding acts and in the joint resolution of March 6, 1894, and the act of March 6, 1900, under which this action is brought, that she is not liable for the unfunded one-third of the debt. These declarations amount to a positive refusal to pay, or to fund, that part of the debt, and are therefore equivalent to a direct repudiation of the State's obligation to that extent.

Under these circumstances, what possible pecuniary interest can the State have in the claims alleged against West Virginia? But, no matter whether Virginia has been released or not, and no matter whether she has repudiated the one-third or not, she sues in this action for contribution, and no such suit can be maintained until she has actually paid, or in some way settled, more than her share of what her counsel call the "common indebtedness." She has decided for herself, with the consent of her creditors, what her just share was, and she has neither paid nor extended anything in addition. No authority has been cited, and we are not aware that any exists, showing that one co-obligor—and the States are not co-obligors—can maintain an action against another, either at law or in equity, for contribution, before he has paid more than his own just proportion of the joint indebtedness. The only authority relied upon by counsel on the other side in support of their contention on this point is 1 Spence, Equity Jurisprudence, p. 662; but that citation has no bearing upon the question.

Speaking of the right to sue for contribution, the author says:

> "If one of several sureties paid the whole or more "than his proportion of the debt, he might compel "his co-surety to contribute proportionately to the "amount so paid. So if the original debtor, or one "of the parties liable, becomes insolvent, each of the "solvent parties was made to contribute to the obli- "gation thrown upon them."

He then states what the Roman law was upon the subject of contribution, and, still speaking of that law, he makes the following statement, which is the only quotation made by counsel on their brief:

> "It was not necessary to wait till some one was "damnified by having paid or having claim made "against him for the whole; a bill might be filed to "settle the amount due from each individual of a "body liable to a common burden, and to compel the "payment by each, of his share." (Original brief, p. 18.)

We have said that there are no co-obligors in this case, and that is conceded by counsel on the other side. The bill is not framed upon the theory that West Virginia was ever bound to the holders of the old bonds, or that she is now bound to the holders of the certificates issued by the State of Virginia, either as a co-obligor or otherwise. The claim is made against her by Virginia alone, and it has been argued throughout the case that the indebtedness is to her. If the old bonds had been secured by a lien upon the public property situated in the new State, or by a pledge of the revenues to be derived from the people or territory embraced in the new State, it might have been contended that there was a direct liability to the creditors upon the part of West Virginia; but such was not the case. The bonds of a State, as this court has often said, are secured only by a pledge of its honor and good faith; and Virginia is still the same State that issued and sold the bonds. It cannot be necessary to make an argument to show that neither this court nor any other has power to exonerate her from any part of her liability. Even if such a power existed in any court, the creditors whose claims would be extinguished by the exoneration would be indispensable parties.

It is now contended by counsel for the plaintiff that there never was a compact between the two States with reference to the old public debt, and that no consent to the formation of the new State was ever given by the legislature of Virginia; and it is said that the question as to the existence of the compact cannot be relied upon by the defendant State in this argument because it is not specifically stated as one of the grounds of demurrer. The compact is set forth in the bill (pp. 4–6), and one of the separate grounds of demurrer is that the court has no jurisdiction to hear and determine the cause, which necessarily requires it to ascertain the foundation and character of the claim asserted and the nature and extent of the remedy sought by the plaintiff. The office of a demurrer is to present to the court the legal and equitable questions arising upon the face of the pleading—not to argue them—and one of the questions presented by the demurrer in this case is whether, if the compact is valid, the court has power to enforce it according to its terms.

We do not propose to reargue the question as to the existence of the compact or to discuss the validity of the Virginia act of May 13, 1862, consenting to the formation of the new State and asking its admission into the union under the constitution which had then been framed. The compact itself was entered into by the sovereignty conventions of the two States and consented to by Congress in accordance with the provisions of Clause 3 of Section 10 of Art. 1 of the constitution of the United States, and all that was required of the legislature of Virginia by Clause 1 of Section 3 of Art. 10 of the constitution was that it should give its consent, not to the compact, but to the formation of the new State out of a part of the territory of the old State.

Counsel claim in the reply briefs that the ordinance of the Wheeling Convention requiring West Virginia to assume a just proportion of the debt and prescribing the method of ascertaining it is binding upon that State, but deny that the conditions upon which the proposition was accepted are binding upon Virginia (Mr. Conrad's brief, pp. 22–23). We insist that the compact is binding as a whole or it is not binding at all, and that the act of the Virginia legislature, passed May 13, 1862, while it was not necessary to the validity of the compact, constituted a ratification of it by that body. Without this act the State of West Virginia could not have been constitutionally formed or admitted into the union, whether there was a compact or not.

Congress never passed but one act providing for the admission of the State into the union, and when it was afterwards actually admitted by the proclamation of the President, the constitution which Congress had already approved had not been altered in the slightest respect so far as it related to the compact between the two States. The only change that had been made, or that was required to be made, by Congress, was in relation to the institution of slavery.

But it is now argued that the compact between the two States has been abrogated by the omission of the State of West Virginia to include in the constitution of 1872 the same provision in regard to the old public debt that was contained in the constitution of 1862 under which the State was admitted into the union; but, notwithstanding this contention, it is still insisted by counsel that West Virginia became liable and is now liable for a just proportion of the debt as provided in the Wheeling ordinance, and which it is claimed constituted a part of the compact. The entire compact was that the new State should take upon itself a just proportion of the public debt, to be ascertained by charging to it all the State expenditures within its limits, and a just proportion of the ordinary expenses of the State Government since any part of the debt was contracted, and deducting therefrom the moneys paid into the treasury of Virginia from the counties included within the new State during that period, and that the legislature of West Virginia should ascertain the same as soon as practicable and provide for its liquidation by a sinking fund sufficient to pay the accruing interest and to redeem the principal within thirty-four years.

This compact was entered into by the sovereignty conventions of the two States. In one the proposition was made in the form of an ordinance, and in the other it was accepted in the form of a constitutional provision; and then it was consented to by Congress, and thus became an absolute and permanent obligation of the two States, which neither of them could thereafter abrogate or alter. It was not necessary for West Virginia to repeat in a subsequent constitution the terms upon which she had accepted Virginia's proposition, and upon which the compact had been concluded with the consent of Congress. The compact itself provides that the new State shall assume a just and equitable proportion of the debt, and that the Legislature of that State shall ascertain what that proportion is, and establish a sinking fund sufficient to pay the interest and redeem the principal in thirty-four years. The latter part of the compact is as binding upon the two States now as it ever was. The legislature of West Virginia has not been abolished; it still exists and possesses full power to provide for the ascertainment and payment of the State's just proportion of the debt in accordance with the stipulations of the compact between the parties. The State of Viriginia has not heretofore supposed that West Virginia had extinguished her obligation to assume and pay a just property of the debt, or that she could do so; but if the argument now made is sound, she has done so by merely omitting a part of the compact from her constitution.

The act of Congress admitting the State into the union and thereby, as this court has held, giving the consent of that body to the compact, is a law of the United States enacted in pursuance of the constitution, and is therefore the supreme law of the land; and the compact itself constitutes a part of that law. Penna. vs. Wheeling Bridge Co., 13 How. 185. No State can abolish it or change it, even by an affirmative act, much less by a mere omission to repeat it in her constitution or statutes.

It is true, as stated in one of the reply briefs, that nearly forty-four years have passed since the compact was made, but it is also true that Virginia has repudiated it ever since 1871; and, although she has in her own exclusive possession all the accounts and vouchers necessary to effect a settlement, she has never presented to West Virginia any account, or even part of an account, which would enable the Legislature of that State to take any action in accordance with the Wheeling ordinance. It will be time enough for Virginia to make complaint against West Virginia when she has furnished that State with such an account or statement as will enable her Legislature, or a commission appointed by it, to ascertain the amount claimed, in the manner prescribed by the Wheeling ordinance, which was Virginia's own chosen method of adjustment.

The reference to the fact that this court entertains jurisdiction of appeals from the Court of Claims involving demands for money, and renders judgments in such cases, is of no consequence in this discussion, because Congress has by statute not only consented that the United States might be sued on such claims, but has expressly authorized judgments to be rendered and directed their payment by the Secretary of the Treasury out of the general appropriations.

Act of March 3, 1863, Ch. 92, sec. 7; 12th, Stat. 766; Act of September 30, 1890, Ch. 1126, sec. 1.

The case of Carter vs. State, 42 La. Ann., 930, quoted from in the original brief of counsel for plaintiff, is not at all in conflict with our contention in the case at bar. That was a proceeding to subject money belonging to the State to the satisfaction of a judgment previously obtained, and the court decided that it had no power to do so, although the legislative had authorized the institution of the action in which the judgment was rendered. In the course of its opinion, the court said:

> "The incidents and appurtenances of ordinary ju> " risdiction have no application to a case like this.
> " Undoubtedly jurisdiction granted to render judg> " ments between parties subject to judicial power
> " and control implies power to execute such judg> " ment. But the sovereign is not subject to judicial > " power and control except just so far as is consented > " thereto; the moment the limit of that consent is > " reached, the judiciary must instantly halt."

But it is said by counsel that this court can afford adequate relief because it can ascertain and declare West Virginia's proportion of the debt, and that this will operate to exonerate Virginia from any further liability on account of the indebtedness. The adjudication would have no such effect; on the contrary, if Virginia is now liable, as her counsel contend, the effect of such adjudication would be simply to fix the amount of her liability, but with no judgment or decree for its payment. How that could afford any relief to Virginia in any respect, or to her creditors, we are unable to see.

While we do not consider it necessary to add anything to the argument heretofore made on that part of the demurrer which raises the question of multifariousness, it is proper to say that we do not controvert any of the propositious stated in Hogg's Eq. Proc., which is relied upon by counsel for plaintiff. They are in accord with the authorities cited by us.

Counsel quote from Mitford's Pl., p. 399, to show that there can be no misjoinder unless the parties have, or may have, conflicting interests in the suit, or unless some of them have no interest in the suit. What the author says, is:

> "If the plaintiffs actually have, or may have, con> "flicting interests in regard to the object of the suit, > "or if any or either of them have no interest in the > "subject-matter of the suit, there is a misjoinder.
> "But to be free from the objection of misjoinder it > "is not necessary that a co-plaintiff should have an > "identity of interest."

They also refer to Daniels' Chancery, pp. 301–2, to show that an auctioneer may be joined with the vendor in a suit against the purchaser, but they omit to state, or quote, the reason given by the author, which is—

> "because the auctioneer has an interest in the con> "tract, and may bring an action upon it; he is also > "interested in being protected against the legal lia> "bility he has incurred in an action by the purchaser > "to recover the deposit" (pp. 301–2).

He then says:

> "Upon a similar principle in cases where all the > "plaintiffs have an interest in the subject of the suit
> "but their interests are distinct and several, they > "will not be allowed to sue together as co-plaintiffs" > (p. 302).

It is not usual to embody the speech of an advocate in a bill in chancery, and thus require the defendant to admit on demurrer the truth of the statements contained in it; yet that course has been pursued in the present case, and counsel on the other side quote from the speech of Mr. Harrison to show that the ultimatum contained in the joint resolution of March 6, 1894, had been abandoned by Virginia in 1900. All that we can say in response to this is that the gentleman who made the speech had no authority from the State of Virginia to propose or agree to any settlement except upon the basis that the share of the State was only-two thirds of the debt. An examination of the act of March 6, 1900, will show that its preamble reaffirms the position which the State of Virginia had previously taken with respect to the extent of West Virginia's obligation for one-third of the debt, and that it does not repeal or modify any part of the joint resolution of March 4, 1894, but merely authorizes the commission to receive the certificates on deposit and to "take such action and institute such proceedings on behalf of the State as may in the judgment of the Commission and the Attorney General be needful and proper to protect the interests of the State and bring about and carry into effect a settlement as aforesaid." Under this act the commission had no power to settle by negotiation except upon the basis that Virginia had paid her full share—two-thirds—but it was authorized to sue for a settlement for the benefit of the certificate holders, and, of course, if less than one-third should be recovered from West Virginia in the suit, they had the power to receive it for distribution among the beneficiaries under the contract made with them.

vs.

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA.

BRIEF OF COUNSEL FOR VIRGINIA UPON THE QUESTIONS RAISED BY THE DEMURRERS.

Statement of Facts as Shown by the Bill.

I.

On the 20th of June, 1863, West Virginia became a State of the American Union pursuant to an act of the United States Congress approved December 31, 1862, and in accordance with a proclamation of President Lincoln made April 20, 1863, under that act of Congress, upon the terms and conditions prescribed by the Commonwealth of Virginia in an ordinance adopted in convention and in the acts passed by the General Assembly of the restored government of the Commonwealth giving her consent to the formation of the new State out of her territory, with the constitution adopted for the new State by the people thereof, and which was sanctioned by Congress.

II.

Prior to the formation of the new State, the Commonwealth of Virginia had contracted an indebtedness approximating, as of the first day of January, 1861, the sum of $33,000,000, evidenced by the contracts and obligations of the undivided State.

This large indebtedness had been created in constructing a system of public highways, turnpikes, canals, railways, and other public internal improvements, begun in the first quarter of the nineteenth century and designed to fairly develop every part of her territory, and to afford means of communication between the different sections of the Commonwealth and the seashore, and to give to the people in all the various portions of the State access to the best available markets.

The "vast potentialities of wealth and revenue in the undeveloped stores of minerals and timber, which had been known for years prior to the date named (1861), and their prospective values, if made accessible to the markets of the country, were understood to be well nigh beyond computation." Accordingly the costly system of highways, canals, and railways thus projected were designed, begun, and in very great measure constructed, for the purpose of developing the resources of the region afterwards embraced in the State of West Virginia, and of giving to its people adequate facilities of communication with other portions of the Commonwealth and access to the seashore and to the markets of the country.

This system of internal improvement and the large indebtedness contracted in carrying it into execution received the sanction of the people of the counties subsequently constituting West Virginia, through their representatives in the General Assembly of the undivided State, and a very large proportion of that indebtedness would not have been created but for the votes of the members of the General Assembly representing those counties; and little or none of that indebtedness would have been contracted had the representatives from the counties subsequently forming the State of West Virginia voted against its creation. Several millions of dollars of said indebtedness were contracted on account of works of internal improvement constructed in the territory now constituting West Virginia.

III.

The 9th section of the ordinance adopted by the people of the restored State of Virginia, in convention assembled in the city of Wheeling, Virginia, on the 20th day of August, 1861, entitled "An ordinance to provide for the formation of a new State out of the portion of the territory of this State," provided as follows:

> "9. The new State shall take upon itself a just proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia, prior to the first day of January, 1861, to be ascertained by charging to it all of the State expenditures within the limits thereof, and a just proportion of the ordinary expenses of the State government since any part of said debt was contracted, and deducting therefrom the moneys paid into the treasury of the Commonwealth from the counties included within the said new State during said period. All private rights and interests in lands within the proposed State, derived from the laws of Virginia prior to such separation shall remain valid and secure under the laws of the proposed State, and shall be determined by the laws now existing in the State of Virginia."

Upon this stipulation and condition, afterwards accepted and acted upon by the people of West Virginia, the consent of the Commonwealth of Virginia was given to the formation of the new State.

IV.

Before the creation of the State of West Virginia, and while the territory and the people afterwards constituting that State still formed a part of the Commonwealth of Virginia and were subject to its jurisdiction and laws, the General Assembly of the restored State of Virginia, on the 3d day of February, 1863, enacted the following law:

> "That all property, real, personal and mixed, owned by, or appertaining to this State, and being within the boundaries of the proposed State of West Virginia, when the same becomes one of the United States, shall thereupon pass to, and become the property of the State of West Virginia, and without any other assignment, conveyance or transfer or delivery than is herein contained, and shall include among other things not herein specified all lands, buildings, roads, and other internal improvements or parts thereof, situated within said boundaries, and vested in this State, or in the president and directors of the literary fund, or the board of public works thereof, or in any person or persons for the use of the State, to the extent of the interest and estate of this State therein; and shall also include the interest of this State, or of the said president and directors, or of the said board of public works, in any parent bank or branch doing business within said boundaries and all stocks of any other company or corporation, the principal office or place of business whereof is located within said boundaries, standing in the name of this State, or of the said president or directors, or of the said board of public works, or of any person or persons, for the use of this State.
> 5. That if the appropriations and transfers of property, stocks, and credits provided for by this act, take effect, the State of West Virginia shall duly account for the same in the settlement hereafter to be made with this State, provided that no such property, stocks and credits shall have been obtained since the reorganization of the State government."

And by another act of the General Assembly of the restored State of Virginia, passed February 4, 1863, it was enacted as follows:

> "1. That the sum of one hundred and fifty thousand dollars be, and is hereby appropriated to the State of West Virginia out of moneys not otherwise appropriated, when the same shall have been formed, organized and admitted as one of the States of the United States.
> 2. That there shall be, and hereby is appropriated to the said State of West Virginia when the same shall become one of the United States, all balances, not otherwise appropriated, that may remain in the treasury, and all moneys not otherwise appropriated, that may come into the treasury up to the time when the said State of West Virginia shall become one of the United States: provided, however, that when the said State of West Virginia shall become one of the United States, it shall be the duty of the auditor of this State, to make a statement of all moneys that up to that time, have been paid into the treasury from counties located outside of the boundaries of the said State of West Virginia, and also of all moneys that up to the same time, have been expended in such counties, and the unexpended surplus of all such moneys shall remain in the treasury and continue to be the property of this State."

These two statutes of the restored government of Virginia validly prescribed the terms and conditions upon which the property and money therein mentioned should be transferred to the new State, when it should be formed; and, pursuant to their provisions, money and property amounting to and of the value of several millions of dollars were, after the formation of the new State, paid over and transferred to and accepted by West Virginia.

V.

The constitution of the State of West Virginia, which became effective when she was admitted into the Union pursuant to the said act of Congress and proclamation of President Lincoln, contained the following provisions:

By section 5 of article VIII of said Constitution it was provided:

> "5. No debt shall be contracted by this State except to meet casual deficits in the revenue, to redeem a previous liability of the State, to suppress insurrection, repel invasion, or defend the State in time of war."

And by section 7 of article VIII it was provided:

> "7. The legislature may, at any time, direct a sale of the stocks owned by the State, in banks and other corporations, but the proceeds of such sale shall be applied to the liquidation of the public debt, and hereafter the State shall not become a stockholder in any bank."

And by section 8 of article VIII it was provided:

> "8. An equitable proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia prior to the first day of January, 1861, shall be assumed by this State, and the legislature shall ascertain the same as soon as may be practicable and provide for the liquidation thereof by a sinking fund sufficient to pay the accruing interest and redeem the principal within thirty-four years."

At the time the constitution containing these provisions was adopted by West Virginia that State did not owe, and could not have owed, any "public debt" or "previous liability," except for her just contributive portion of the public debt of the original State of Virginia, and for the money and property of the original State which had been transferred to and received by her under the acts of the General Assembly of the restored State of Virginia above set forth, enacted while the territory and people afterwards forming the State of West Virginia constituted a part of the Commonwealth of Virginia.

The provisions of sections 7 and 8 of article VII of said constitution were embodied therein by the people of West Virginia, or their representatives, for the purpose of complying with and carrying out in good faith the stipulations and conditions upon which the consent of Virginia was given to the formation of the State of West Virginia, and to the transfer of the money and property aforesaid to said new State.

VI.

After the formation of the State of West Virginia and after the restored government of Virginia had become the only government of the Commonwealth and its authority recognized and established throughout her limits, at intervals after the year 1865 down to and including the year 1905, various efforts were made by the Commonwealth of Virginia, through its constituted authorities, to bring about and effect an adjustment and settlement with West Virginia of the equitable proportion of the public debt of the undivided State proper to be borne and paid by the State of West Virginia. All of these efforts proved unavailing and abortive; and for years West Virginia has refused or failed to take any action or do anything for the purpose of bringing about any adjustment or settlement with this State.

Only after exhausting every means of amicable negotiation and having her overtures to that end repeatedly refused, and as a last resort, has Virginia been constrained at length reluctantly to apply to this, the only tribunal which can afford relief, for an adjudication and determination of this question, of such vast importance to her and to all of her people.

VII.

Without waiting for a settlement with West Virginia, the Commonwealth proceeded, fully recognizing her liability for an indebtedness, all of which stood in her name, soon after the establishment of its restored government at Richmond, to make provision for the settlement and payment of the portion of the common debt of the undivided State which she could be fairly expected to assume and pay, under the circumstances then existing and the conditions which confronted her.

Several efforts were made to effect such an adjustment and settlement, the most important of which was that embodied in the act of March 30, 1871, mentioned at page 7 and copied at pages 13 to 16 of the bill.

By reason of the then impoverished condition of her people, occasioned by disasters which had destroyed their resources and paralyzed their productive energies, it was soon apparent that Virginia, in assuming and capitalizing, and again recapitalizing, the accrued interest upon the debt of the original State, and undertaking to pay, with 6 per cent. interest, two-thirds of the aggregate sum thus ascertained, had assumed a heavier burden than she was able to bear. Accordingly other plans for the settlement of the State debt were adopted, and a final adjustment made under the act of February 20, 1892, set forth in the bill.

As a result of this, it will be seen that Virginia has assumed and already actually paid off and retired, exclusive of the large amounts she has paid on account of interest, a principal sum aggregating as much as, or more than, the entire principal sum of the debt of the undivided State as of January 1, 1861.

The facts in regard to these various transactions and the adjustment made by Virginia with the common creditors of the old State are recited in the bill merely for the purpose of showing the present status of the public debt of the original State and the precise relation of this Commonwealth at the present time in respect thereto.

Of course, the rights of West Virginia cannot be affected by any of these transactions between Virginia and the common creditors of the undivided State, except to the extent that Virginia's rights and action therein may entitle her to contribution from West Virginia.

VIII.

As indicating the character of the efforts and sacrifices which Virginia, notwithstanding the disasters and losses which her people have endured, has made, in order to bear and to discharge her just obligations on account of the common debt of the undivided State, and as showing something of the strength of her equitable claim against West Virginia, it must be remembered that she has actually paid off, retired, and discharged and satisfied, so far as West Virginia is concerned, as of the date of the institution of this suit, over $71,000,000, including principal and interest, on account of said common indebtedness.

While Virginia has made this large contribution towards the settlement of the common debt, West Virginia has not paid one dollar thereof.

IX.

Since January 1, 1861, the arbitrary date fixed by the Wheeling ordinance as of which the adjustment and settlement between the two States shall be made, Virginia has actually paid off or retired, and now holds in her own hands and for her own benefit, exclusive of the sums represented by the certificates issued under the funding acts aforesaid, obligations of the undivided State amounting in the aggregate, including the interest to be fairly computed thereon to date, to a sum in excess of $25,000,000. For all of the obligations and indebtedness of the original State, so taken up and retired or paid off by her, Virginia has a just claim against West Virginia for contribution to the extent of West Virginia's equitable liability therefor.

X.

As a part of the adjustment which Virginia from time to time has made with the holders of the bonds and obligations of the undivided State and as a proper stipulation in connection with the partial settlements thereof made by her, it was agreed between them and Virginia that upon giving to them respectively her obligations for the respective portions of each of the old bonds of the undivided State agreed to be assumed and paid by Virginia, these old original bonds should be deposited with Virginia, and so far as not thus funded by her in her own obligations should be held by her as trustee for the holder or his assigns; and to each of these parties thus entitled she has given her certificate to this effect.

By the terms of the settlements authorized by the acts of 1879, 1882, and 1892, set forth in the bill, no liability rests upon Virginia on account of the certificates given by her pursuant to the terms of those acts, for the bonds deposited with her, and to be held by her, to await a settlement with West Virginia, as to the portion thereof not assumed or paid by Virginia. But it has been suggested that, although there is no liability assumed by Virginia by reason of issuing said certificates or upon said certificates, that there may still be a liability upon her as to the unfunded portion of the bonds deposited with her under the acts of 1879, 1882, and 1892. This, however, is a matter of minor importance, because a comparatively small proportion of the old debt of the State was funded under the acts of 1879, 1882, and 1892, as will appear from the circumstance that there are in all only $1,609,600.15 of the certificates issued under the last-mentioned three acts outstanding in the hands of the public, as is shown by the exhibit at page 73 of the bill.

The great bulk of the debt of the old State was funded under the act of 1871, and the unfunded portion of the bonds deposited with Virginia by the public creditors under the terms of that act, amounted to $12,703,451.79, upon the principal interest-bearing sum of which there is interest due from July 1, 1871. (See Exhibit No. 1, page 13 of the bill, and statement of Second Auditor of Virginia, embodied in the address of Mr. Randolph Harrison, found at page 73 of the bill.)

The arrangement under the funding act of 1871 was very different from that provided for by the subsequent acts of 1879, 1882, and 1892.

By the acts of 1871 Virginia undertook to be the custodian of the bonds of the undivided State deposited with her, so far as they were unfunded; and that payment should "be provided for in accordance with such settlement as shall hereafter be had between the States of Virginia and West Virginia in regard to the public debt of the State of Virginia existing at the time of its dismemberment."

Whatever may have been the purpose of the General Assembly of Virginia in the enactment of this law and in authorizing such contracts to be made, it would seem that Virginia's legal liability on account of said unfunded portion of said bonds is not released or affected by the transaction, but still exists.

However, under all the circumstances of the case and in view of the underlying equities suggested by the facts stated in the bill, it would seem that Virginia has already unquestionably done as much as she could be fairly expected to do towards paying off the common public debt of the old State. The great mass of the holders of the certificates issued by her under the act of 1871, and under the other acts above recited, who are the persons entitled to the said unfunded bonds deposited with her and now held by her, recognizing the justice of this view, have, through their authorized representatives, entered into the agreement printed at pages 83 to 86 of the bill.

XI.

By joint resolution of the General Assembly of Virginia, printed as Exhibit No. 5, beginning at page 39 of the bill, entitled—approved March 6, 1894, a commission was created for the purposes set forth in the title to the resolution.

> "A joint resolution to provide for adjusting with the State of West Virginia the proportion of the public debt of the original State of Virginia proper to be borne by West Virginia, for the application of whatever may be received from West Virginia to the payment of those found to be entitled to the same,"

The Virginia Debt Commission mentioned in the bill was created pursuant to that resolution, and made earnest efforts to bring about a settlement with West Virginia, without any satisfactory result.

Accordingly the General Assembly of Virginia afterwards passed the act approved March 6, 1900, printed as Exhibit No. 6 of the bill, beginning at page 41 thereof, the object of which is stated in its title as follows:

> "An act to provide for the settlement with West Virginia of the proportion of the public debt of the original State of Virginia proper to be borne by West Virginia, and for the due protection of the Commonwealth of Virginia in the premises."

By this act, as plainly appears from its terms, additional powers and authority were conferred upon this commission, and it was made its duty, and power was conferred upon it, by and with the advice and approval of the Attorney-General of the State, to take such action and institute such proceedings on behalf of the State as may, in the judgment of said commission and Attorney-General, be needful and proper to protect the interest of the State and bring about and carry into effect a settlement as aforesaid.

After again making an earnest effort to bring about an amicable settlement with West Virginia, by which the proportion of the debt of the original State of Virginia proper to be borne by West Virginia should be ascertained, and after having had their overtures to that end rejected by West Virginia, the said commission deemed it to be its duty, with the advice and approval of the Attorney-General of Virginia, to cause this suit to be brought in strict conformity with the powers conferred upon them by the acts aforesaid, the commission and the Attorney-General considering such action to be needful and proper to protect the interest of the State and bring about and carry into effect such a settlement.

Accordingly, and in strict conformity with the authority conferred by the act of March 6, 1900, this suit was instituted.

BRIEF OF ARGUMENT UPON THE QUESTIONS OF LAW PRESENTED BY THE DEMURRERS.

As to the first ground alleged in the amended demurrer, namely, that there is a misjoinder of parties plaintiff and a misjoinder of causes of action, we cannot see that this objection is well taken.

The definitions of misjoinder under English chancery practice, as well as the practice in this country, show that there is no such vice in the bill:

(a) As to the misjoinder of parties: This does not arise unless—

> "Coplaintiffs actually have or may have conflicting interests in regard to the object of the suit, or if any or either of them have no interest in the subject-matter of the suit."
> Mitf. Pl., p. 399, note.

The rule as to misjoinder of plaintiffs, as laid down by Mr. Daniell, is that—

> "persons who have no interest in the litigation cannot be joined as coplaintiffs in a suit with those who have."
> Ist Daniell Chy. (5th Am. ed.), m. p. 301.

Example given by Mr. Daniell of what is not misjoinder; Auctioneer can be joined as coplaintiff with the vender in a bill against the purchaser.

Id., m. p. 302.

Again: Want of interest by a coplaintiff in the subject-matter is ground of demurrer.

Mitf. Pl., 160, 161.

Again: Plaintiffs who have no common interest, but assert distinct and several claims against one and the same defendant, cannot be joined.

Story's Eq. Pl., section 279.

On the other hand, where there is a community of interests among coplaintiffs desiring the same relief against a common defendant, they may be joined.

It was held in Ware vs. Duke of Northumberland, 2 Anstruther's Rep., p. 469, that:

> "Unconnected parties might be joined in one suit where there was a common interest among them all, centering in the point in issue in the cause."

This doctrine is strongly approved by Chancellor Kent in Brickenhoff et als. vs. Browns, where different judgment creditors united in one bill for discovery and account to set aside impediments to their remedies at law caused by the fraudulent acts of their common debtor.

6 Johnson Chy., 139, 151, 152.

Chancellor Kent says at page 151:

> "It is an ordinary case in this court, for creditors to unite, or for one or more, on behalf of themselves and the rest, to sue the representative of their debtor in possession of the assets, and to seek an account of the estate.
> "This is done to prevent a multiplicity of suits, a very favorite object with this court; and this principle so far controls the other rule, which preserves, in some degree, an analogy between pleadings in chancery, and the simplicity of declarations at common law. There is no sound reason for requiring the judgment creditors to separate their suits, when they have one common object in view, which, in fact, governs the whole case." (Italics here and elsewhere ours).

(b) Nor is there any foundation whatever for the objection that there is a misjoinder of causes of action.

Considering together the two grounds of objection which are jointly presented in the first assignment of grounds of demurrer made in the amended demurrer in the light of the established doctrines and definitions, we beg leave to say that they are both founded upon an utter misapprehension of the meaning, scope, and purpose of the bill.

It is impossible that there can be any misjoinder of parties plaintiff, because there is only one party plaintiff. Virginia, in her corporate capacity, is the only plaintiff in the suit. She does not sue in any representative capacity, though the bill discloses the fact that, by reason of the arrangements which she has made with the great mass of the holders of the bonds of the old State, she does hold in her possession nearly all of those bonds as a depository, and quoad the custody thereof that she holds them in a fiduciary capacity; but she does not sue as trustee, but sues in her own name, for the purpose of obtaining the equitable relief to which the bill shows that she is fairly entitled.

In so far as said bonds have been funded in her own obligations and discharged by her, she holds those bonds as vouchers and evidence of her satisfaction of the same against the State of West Virginia, who is, as a proposition of public law and of equity, bound jointly with her to the public creditors to pay the same, and, as between her and West Virginia, is bound by contract to pay West Virginia's equitable proportion thereof.

If Virginia had no personal interest in respect to the bonds so deposited and held by her in a fiduciary capacity, we would cheerfully concede that she would have no standing to maintain this suit in respect to these bonds; but Virginia not only has an interest, but a very great interest, in respect to the unfunded and unsatisfied bonds of the old State, which, confiding in her fair dealing, the public creditors have entrusted to her custody, and in the settlement by

West Virginia of her fair equitable proportion of the indebtedness of the undivided State represented by these bonds; and that interest is that she shall be exonerated, at least to the extent of West Virginia's liability therefor, from any obligation to pay the same.

To obtain such just exoneration she has invoked the equitable jurisdiction of this court.

Not only is she entitled to maintain and prosecute this suit, in order to obtain the exoneration which, according to the general principles of equity she is entitled to be decreed, but, by the special contract between her and the parties entitled to these bonds, she has, without any prejudice to the rights of West Virginia or any violation of any duty she owes to West Virginia, and without doing anything of which West Virginia has any ground whatever for complaint, acquired a still greater interest and right, namely, to be entirely exonerated from any liability on account of the unfunded portion of the common debt represented by the bonds so deposited with her and by the certificates which she has issued therefor.

This interest is given to her by the express terms of the contract which she has made with these certificate-holders, who are the owners of the bonds of which she is the custodian, and who, recognizing the enormous contributions which she has made from her limited means to the satisfaction of the common debt, have cheerfully agreed to accept whatever amount this court shall ascertain to be the just and equitable proportion of the common debt of the old State to be borne by West Virginia, in full discharge and satisfaction of any claim they may have against Virginia and in full acquittance of all demands against her. (See 4th clause of contract, p. 85 of bill.)

It will be observed that, as has been already suggested, this stipulation, though it enures to the protection and to the interest of Virginia, in no sense and by no possibility is or can be prejudicial to any right of West Virginia; for under no circumstances could or will this agreement operate to add one cent to the liability of West Virginia.

We respectfully submit that her equitable right to exoneration from liability as to these unsatisfied and unfunded bonds, of which she is the custodian, alone gives her a standing to maintain this suit to have West Virginia's liability, not only for the whole indebtedness of the undivided State, but for the bonds so deposited with her, ascertained, determined, and adjudicated; and that her contractual right to exoneration under her agreement with the parties equitably entitled to those bonds increases her interest and confirms her right to have such exoneration decreed.

An authority of respectability and of proven merit has said:

> "It was not necessary to wait till some one was damnified by having paid, or having claim made against him for the whole; a bill might be filed to settle the amount due from each individual of a body liable to a common burden, and to compel the payment by each, of his share."
> 1 Spence Equitable Juris., marginal p. 662.

The suit is brought, as appears plainly from the bill, for the purpose of obtaining a complete settlement with West Virginia and an adjustment of a controversy which has vexed both States for a generation past; and as a part of this settlement and as a necessary incident to it, and in accordance with the manifest equitable rights of Virginia to have that settlement decreed—

First, in respect to some $25,000,000, including principal and interest, of the obligations of the original State, which have been paid off or retired by the Commonwealth of Virginia since her dismemberment and the vouchers for which transaction she now holds in her treasury; and as to this she invokes the equitable jurisdiction of this court for contribution from West Virginia to the extent of West Virginia's liability on account of the common obligations which Virginia has thus paid off and retired; and,

Second, to obtain the exoneration to which she is entitled in respect to the unsettled and unfunded one-third of the debt of the undivided State, the obligations evidencing which have been deposited with her.

There is no possible conflict between or inconsistency in the two kindred and associated rights of contribution and of exoneration thus possessed by Virginia, or in the assertion of the same in one common suit. Indeed, it is proper and right that they should be asserted and united in one suit, and it would be ground of objection not to include them in one suit.

This would be true, even if there were more than one party, who had such rights, plaintiff to the bill; but, in the nature of things, there is and can be but one party plaintiff here, because there is only one Commonwealth of Virginia; and, as to her, "there is a common interest centering in the point of issue in the cause," and, in every phase and aspect of the cause, a common right in her capacity as a creditor of West Virginia in respect to so much of the common debt as Virginia has settled and paid off in full, and in her capacity of co-obligor of West Virginia as to so much of the common debt as remains unsatisfied, to have a settlement and ascertainment and adjudication of the equitable proportion of the debt of the undivided States which West Virginia should pay.

The effect and logical consequence of such an ascertainment and adjudication will necessarily be to obtain contribution to Virginia by West Virginia to the extent of West Virginia's equitable liability to make such contribution, and to obtain the exoneration of Virginia from any farther liability on account of the common debt of the old State; and this is the ultimate relief to which Virginia is justly and equitably entitled, upon the showing made by her bill.

Again, the two causes of complaint united in this bill, and on which relief is prayed, are:

1. The liability of West Virginia to Virginia for her reasonable and just contributive share of the public debt of Virginia as of the 1st of January, 1861.

This liability rests upon several distinct and evident grounds:

(a) On the principle of public law, that "where a State is divided into two or more States, in the adjustment of liabilities between each other the debts of the parent State should be ratably apportioned among them" (Hartman vs. Greenhow, 102 U. S., 677.

(b) On the ordinance of the convention of Virginia of August 20, 1861, "to provide for the formation of a new State out of the portion of the territory of this State," by section 9 of which ordinance it was provided that "the new State shall take upon itself a just proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia prior to the first day of January, 1861," &c.

(c) On the constitution formed by the State of West Virginia and submitted to Congress, and on which West Virginia was admitted into the Union (Virginia vs. West Virginia, 11 Wall, 43).

By section 8 of article 8 of said constitution it was provided that—

> "An equitable proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia prior to the first day of January, 1861, shall be assumed by this State, and the legislature shall ascertain the same as soon as may be practicable, and provide for the liquidation thereof by a sinking fund sufficient to pay the accruing interest and redeem the principal within thirty-four years."

2. Under and by virtue of the act of the General Assembly of the restored government of Virginia, passed February 3, 1863, property of the Commonwealth of Virginia, to the amount in value of several millions of dollars, was transferred from Virginia, and was delivered to and received by West Virginia, on the express condition that "the State of West Virginia shall duly account for the same in the settlement hereafter to be made with this State, provided that no such property stocks and credits shall have been obtained since the organization of the State government."

And by act of the same General Assembly, passed February 4, 1863, the sum of one hundred and fifty thousand dollars ($150,000) was appropriated and subsequently paid over to West Virginia, and by the same act all moneys and balances in the treasury of Virginia not otherwise appropriated were appropriated to the said State of West Virginia.

It is too plain and obvious to be questioned, that both of the two above-recited grounds of complaint grew out of and formed material parts of the same transaction, viz., the generation of the new State of West Virginia and its necessary sustenance and support while in her infancy. By her very birth, West Virginia incurred the liability for her just proportion of the public debt of Virginia. It was in fact and in law her debt as much as it was the debt of Virginia. She inherited it. It was congenital. Then, at her birth, West Virginia was wholly without resources or means for maintaining herself and continuing her political existence twenty-four hours save by the money and property of Virginia which fell into her hands. The appropriation of this money and property to the uses of West Virginia created a debt of so high an obligation that, even without the express condition on which it was given and received, she would be compelled to account for it.

Can there be doubt, then, for one moment that these two grounds of complaint are so intimately and essentially connected as that, had this complainant brought her separate bill on each ground, this court would, to avoid so useless multiplicity of actions, have consolidated or caused them to be heard together? The people who appeared as the citizens of the restored government of Virginia and who formed the conventions and General Assemblys by which ordinances were framed for the creation of the new State of West Virginia—and consent was given in the name of Virginia for the creation of such new State—and who appropriated millions of dollars in value of the property of Virginia for the use of West Virginia were, it may be, in legal contemplation, citizens of Virginia up to the 20th day of June, 1863; but on that day these same people became citizens of West Virginia and thenceforth sat in conventions of her people and in her halls of legislation. But before this transformation took place, and in contemplation of its assured coming, they, as citizens of Virginia, appropriated all her property within their reach and gave it to the embryo State.

So it appears by the allegations of this bill, which must be taken here to be true, that West Virginia is justly liable on many grounds for a just proportion of the public debt of her parent State, Virginia; that West Virginia has not only repudiated and openly disavowed all such liability, but that she has appropriated to her own use a large amount in value of the public property of Virginia, which Virginia might properly have applied, as part of her public assets, to the payment of her public debt; and now, when by this bill in equity Virginia calls on West Virginia to account for the property which she has appropriated and applied to her own uses, and to come in before this court and have her proportion of the public debt ascertained, West Virginia, by her demurrer, protests that the part of the public debt which she owes and the part of the public assets which she has appropriated to her own use are two subjects of complaint so distinct and unconnected as should relieve her from making answer to the bill.

Counsel for the defendant rely upon the decision of this court in the cases of New York vs. Louisiana and New Hampshire vs. Louisiana, 108 U. S., 78; but, as has already been made apparent, this case is entirely different in fact and in principle from those cases; indeed, there is no analogy between them.

Neither the State of New York or New Hampshire had any direct or personal interest in the bonds of Louisiana or in the subject-matters of controversy in those suits, but were mere volunteers, self-constituted trustees, without sustaining any relation, or interest, or obligation, or liability in regard to the bonds, or to any question presented in those causes.

While it may be true that, as to the custody of some of these unsatisfied bonds, Virginia sustains the relation of trustee, she has an enormous interest as to those bonds—an interest as substantial and as real, if not in fact as great, as if she had actually paid these bonds in full.

The next ground of demurrer assigned by the defendant is:

> "That this court has no jurisdiction of either the parties to or the subject-matter of this action, because it appears by the said bill that the matters therein set forth do not constitute, within the meaning of the Constitution of the United States, such a controversy, or such controversies, between the Commonwealth of Virginia and the State of West Virginia as can be heard and determined in this court, and this court has no power to render or enforce any final judgment or decree thereon."

This ground of objection is based upon two postulates, each of which, we respectfully submit, is fallacious as applied to this case.

The first is, as we understand the position of defendant's counsel, that the judicial power of the United States and the jurisdiction conferred by section 2 of article III of the Constitution of the United States upon the Supreme Court over "controversies between two or more States" does not embrace a controversy such as is presented here, or any other controversy which, like the one here, is based upon any pecuniary obligation or liability of a State; that while it does confer jurisdiction upon the Supreme Court of the United States over certain controversies between States, the word "controversy" as used in that section of the Constitution, does not embrace any controversy in regard to any pecuniary matter.

The second postulate which defendant's counsel must maintain to support the above objection is necessarily that the language of the Constitution referred to does not confer jurisdiction in any case in which the court has no power to render or enforce and make effective its final judgment thereon, and that this court cannot render or enforce its final judgment or decree making effective the relief sought by the plaintiff.

We will now consider this two fold ground of objection:

(a) Can it be true that the word "controversy" as thus used in section 2 of article III of the Constitution can be fairly given any such narrow construction and confined by any such forced and restricted limitations?

It will be observed that precisely the same word defines the jurisdiction of this court as to "controversies between citizens of different States."

Judge St. George Tucker, in discussing the judiciary clauses of the United States Constitution, says, in his appendix to Tucker's Blackstone, vol. 1, p. 120, edition of 1802:

> "The word 'controversies,' as here used, must be understood as relating to such as are of civil nature. It is probably unknown in any other sense, as I do not recollect ever to have heard the expression 'criminal controversy.' As here applied, it seems particularly appropriated to such disputes as might arise between the United States and any one or more States, respecting territorial or fiscal matters; or between the United States and their debtors, contractors > and agents. This construction is confirmed by the application of the word in the ensuing clauses, where it evidently refers to disputes of a civil nature only, such, for example, as may arise between two or more States, or between citizens of different States, or between a State and the citizen of another State, none of which could possibly be supposed to relate to such as are of a criminal nature."

It is to be presumed that the framers of the Constitution did not design by the use of the same identical expression to confer one jurisdiction upon the federal courts as to matters of dispute between States and another jurisdiction as to matters of dispute between citizens of different States. In other words, if the words "controversies between two or more States" do not embrace, under any circumstances, in the one case controversies growing out of contracts or liabilities for the payment of money, the words "controversies between citizens of different States" cannot be fairly construed to embrace any controversies of a pecuniary character; and yet we are surely within limits when we say that a large majority of the "controversies between citizens of different States" of which the federal courts have from their foundation taken jurisdiction have been controversies arising out of contracts for the payment of money.

But it is urged that it is derogatory to the dignity of a State to have it impleaded in any court upon any contract, or obligation or promise which a State may have made.

Whether this be true or not is immaterial, if it be true (and as to this there can be no question) that the States, by coming into the Union and accepting the Constitution of the United States as their supreme law, have agreed to submit their controversies to the supreme tribunal created by that Constitution and clothed by it with jurisdiction of just such controversies.

And is it any more derogatory to the dignity of a State for it to be impleaded in this impartial tribunal in a controversy involving such important and far-reaching questions of public obligation and of public right as are presented in this cause than it would be to be impleaded in this court upon the question as to whether one State had encroached upon the territorial limits of another State; or as to whether it was improperly allowing its citizens to pollute the waters flowing through its territory and by the territory of another State, or that it was in violation of the rights of a neighboring State, diverting, dissipating, and absorbing streams of water rising in one State and preventing their natural flow into the territory of another State; or that it was doing any one of the things for which States have been impleaded under jurisdiction recognized and approved by this Court?

We are unable to see that there is any surrender of the dignity of a State in that it submits, or, if recalcitrant, is compelled to submit, its controversies to the adjudication of a tribunal of its own creation and selection for the settlement of any question of controversy involving property rights, or any other direct interests of a State in its corporate capacity, or of the people of a State represented by the government of the State.

It is urged that a State cannot be sued without her consent; but, as has been repeatedly decided by this court, all of the States have, in most solemn form, given their consent to the jurisdiction of this court over all civil controversies which may arise between them.

A careful review of all of the decisions of this court which throw light upon this subject, we think, justifies us in the view that this is no longer a debatable question.

The word "controversy" as used in this section of the Constitution has been repeatedly passed upon and interpreted by this court. Not only has its meaning been fixed by this court in approving the jurisdiction taken by the circuit courts of the United States of hundreds of controversies of a pecuniary character "between citizens of different States, but it has been repeatedly given a similar significance and interpretation, and the jurisdiction of this court sustained in respect to controversies to which States were parties and in respect to controversies to which the United States has been a party, as to which the definition and limitation of the jurisdiction conferred by the Constitution is defined by precisely the same word, "controversies." And so we say that, if this court has no jurisdiction of any controversies arising out of demands for money, or obligations for the payment of money, between States, then neither this court nor any other federal court could have jurisdiction of any such pecuniary "controversy between citizens of different States," or of controversies to which a State is a party, or of a controversy to which the United States is a party, for in each case the jurisdiction is conferred by precisely the same language.

And such we understand to be the doctrine established by the decisions of this court.

The first case in which this question arose was that of Chisholm, ex'r, vs. Georgia, 2 Dal., p. 419, in which this court held that the judicial power of the United States and the original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, as conferred by section 2, article III of the Constitution, embraced a demand for money asserted against a State by a citizen of another State in an ordinary action of assumpsit, and that such a case presented a "controversy" within the meaning of that section of the Constitution.

Mr. Justice Iredell alone dissented, not as to the construction given by the majority of the court to the word "controversy," but as to the decision of the majority of the court in construing section 2 of article III so as to extend the jurisdiction of the federal courts to a pecuniary demand asserted by a citizen of one State against another State. He held and argued that the language used in the Constitution, taken as a whole and construed in the light of the historical facts which he mentioned, was not designed to give the federal courts jurisdiction of a suit by any individual against a sovereign State upon any merely pecuniary demand; but it is an exceedingly significant circumstance that Mr. Justice Iredell was constrained to hold, and he did declare, that—> "The Supreme Court hath, therefore, first, exclusive jurisdiction in every controversy of a civil nature: 1st. Between two or more States. 2d. Between a State and a foreign State. 3d. Where a suit or proceeding is depending against ambassadors, other public ministers, or their domestics, or domestic servants. Second. Original, but not exclusive jurisdiction, 1st, between a State and citizens of other States. 2d. Between a State and foreign citizens or subjects. 3d. Where a suit is brought by ambassadors, or other public ministers. 4th. Where a consul or vice-consul, is a party."

> Id., p. 431.

Had that suit, like this, been a suit between two States; had that been a suit by South Carolina vs. Georgia, upon a demand for money, there cannot be a doubt but that this court, as then constituted, would have unanimously maintained its jurisdiction. And such is the meaning and effect of the decision of all the Judges.

It may be fairly claimed that the ruling of the majority of the court in Chisholm, ex'r, vs. Georgia has been questioned, if not overruled, as to the suability of a State by any private citizen independently of the eleventh amendment, and the opinion of Mr. Justice Iredell in that case affirmed by the opinion of this court, as formulated by Mr. Justice Bradley in Hans vs. Louisiana, 134 U. S., p. 1; but it will be seen that Mr. Justice Bradley, in the interesting opinion referred to, affirms and approves the opinion and the views of Mr. Justice Iredell in the Chisholm case; and Mr. Justice Iredell, in his opinion so unqualifiedly affirmed, as we have seen, held that this court had jurisdiction "in every controversy of a civil nature between two or more States," though he held that jurisdiction was not conferred upon it of a controversy between an individual plaintiff suing a State upon a pecuniary demand.

There can be no doubt that the decision and reasoning of all the judges in the case of Chisholm, ex'r, vs. Georgia confirms every contention made for the plaintiff in this case as to the rightful and necessary jurisdiction of this court over a controversy of the kind presented here between the Commonwealth of Virginia and the State of West Virginia.

The question of the nature and extent of the jurisdiction conferred upon this court by article III of the Constitution in respect to controversies to which a State is a party, and also as to controversies between two or more States, was exhaustively discussed by Chief Justice Marshall in Cohens vs. Virginia, 6 Wheat., pp. 364, 375-440.

In considering the effect of the adoption of the 11th amendment upon that jurisdiction the Chief Justice, at pages 405-6, says:

> "This leads to a consideration of the 11th amendment.
>
> "It is in these words: 'The judicial power of the United States shall not be construed to extend to any suit in law or equity commenced or prosecuted against one of the United States, by citizens of another State, or by citizens or subjects of any foreign State.'
> "It is a part of our history, that, at the adoption of the Constitution, all the States were greatly indebted; and the apprehension that these debts might be prosecuted in the federal courts formed a very serious objection to that instrument. Suits were instituted; and the court maintained its jurisdiction. The alarm was general; and, to quiet the apprehensions that were so extensively entertained, this amendment was proposed in Congress, and adopted by the State legislatures. That its motive was not to maintain the sovereignty of a State from the degradation supposed to attend a compulsory appearance before the tribunal of the nation, may be inferred from the terms of the amendment. It does not comprehend controversies between two or more States, or between a State and a foreign State. The jurisdiction of the court still extends to these cases; and in these a state > may still be sued. We must ascribe the amendment, then, to some other cause than the dignity of a State. There is no difficulty in finding this cause. Those who were inhibited from commencing a suit against a State, or from prosecuting one which might be commenced before the adoption of the amendment, were persons who might probably be its creditors. There was not much reason to fear that foreign or sister states would be creditors to any considerable amount, and there was reason to retain the jurisdiction of the court in those cases, because it might be essential to the preservation of peace. The amendment, therefore, extended to suits commenced or prosecuted by individuals, but not to those brought by States."

And at page 378, in defining the jurisdiction of this court in the class of cases in which its jurisdiction by the terms of the Constitution is determined by the character of the parties, the Chief Justice uses this language, which would seem to be conclusive as applied to this case:

> "In the second class, the jurisdiction depends entirely on the character of the parties. In this are comprehended 'controversies between two or more States, between a State and citizens of another State, and between a State and foreign States, citizens or subjects.' If these be the parties, it is entirely unimportant what may be the subject of controversy. Be it what it may, these parties have a constitutional right to come into the courts of the Union."

It has been argued that these rulings of the Chief Justice were obiter dicta. They were entirely pertinent to the great question which he was considering and had a direct bearing upon it. The question which the court had to review was what was the character of the controversies over which it had jurisdiction under article III of the Constitution, after the adoption of the 11th amendment; and it was necessary in that connection for the court to construe the word "controversy" as used in that article.

The opinion was one of the most lucid and ablest which ever came from the mind of the great Chief Justice. It was evidently well and carefully considered.

Under such circumstances a conclusion which he so deliberately reached and so clearly expressed ought to have the greatest weight.

It may also be justly claimed that the expressions in opinions in two or three later cases, which are claimed to be inconsistent with the views of Chief Justice Marshall, are all of them far more emphatically obiter than were his conclusions as above quoted.

It is to be presumed, of course, that the controversies to which the Chief Justice referred were controversies in a juridical sense; that is to say, justiciable controversies; but where has it ever been held by any court anywhere that a controversy arising out of a contract for the payment of money was not justiciable?

Since money supplanted barter in the dealings and contracts of mankind, and since courts for the adjudication of civil controversies have been established, a great part of the disputes which have grown out of the contracts of mankind have been controversies about the payment of money. They have not only been "solvable" by the courts, but they are generally more really "solvable," for principles of justice and right and more adequate relief can usually be administered in respect to them than in respect to some other descriptions of controversy which have been held to be justiciable by this court. For instance, the prevention of the flow of polluted water from the State under whose authority it has been contaminated, along the borders of another State, the health of whose inhabitants is prejudiced by the flow of such polluted water by their shores, as in Missouri vs. Illinois, 180 U. S., p. 208; or the prevention of the undue retarding and diminution of the natural flow of rivers by the State in which they have their source into the State through which they have their natural exit, as in Kansas vs. Colorado, 185 U. S., p. 125; or, indeed, the establishment of a disputed boundary line between coterminous States, as in Rhode Island vs. Massachusetts, and a number of later cases where this court has taken jurisdiction of such controversies.

In Missouri vs. Illinois, 180 U. S., 240, Mr. Justice Shiras, after reviewing at great length the cases decided under the constitutional provision giving this court original jurisdiction in controversies between two States says:

> "The cases cited show that such jurisdiction has been exercised in cases involving boundaries and jurisdiction over lands and their inhabitants, and in cases directly affecting the property, rights and interests of a State. But such cases manifestly do not cover the entire field in which such controversies may arise, and for which the Constitution has provided a remedy; and it would be objectionable, and indeed, impossible, for the court to anticipate by definition what controversies can and what cannot be brought within the original jurisdiction of this court."

This question has been directly passed upon by this court and its jurisdiction over controversies arising upon pecuniary demands has been sustained in—

Georgia vs. Brailsford, 2 Del., p. 402;
Texas vs. White, 7 Wal., p. 700;
Florida vs. Anderson, 91 U. S., p. 667;
Alabama vs. Burr et als., 115 U. S., p. 413; and even more emphatically and conclusively in—

United States vs. North Carolina, 136 U. S., p. 211; United States vs. Texas, 143 U. S., p. 621; and United States vs. Michigan, 190 U. S., pp. 379, 396, 406.

The three last cases would seem to be entirely decisive of the question.

The very language under which this court took jurisdiction of these cases, all involving pecuniary demands of the United States against the several defendant States, is used in the Constitution to confer jurisdiction upon this court of controversies between States; and if that language in the one case gave this court jurisdiction of a controversy arising out of, or asserted upon, a pecuniary demand, by a logical and inevitable consequence it gives this court jurisdiction of a similar controversy between States.

It may possibly be contended that the question of jurisdiction was not raised in United States vs. North Carolina, 136 U. S., p. 211, but such a contention would be idle, because this court, and no other federal court, according to the uniform decisions of this court, can, even by consent of parties, exercise jurisdiction in any case in which such jurisdiction has not been conferred upon it by the Constitution or by valid act of Congress.

This question arose in United States vs. Texas, 143 U. S., p. 621, supra, where, at page 642, this court, through Mr. Justice Harlan delivering its opinion, said:

> "The cases in this court show that the framers of the Constitution did provide, by that instrument, for the judicial determination of all cases in law and equity between two or more States, including those involving questions of boundary. Did they omit to provide for the judicial determination of controversies arising between the United States and one or more of the States of the Union? This question is in effect answered by United States v. North Carolina, 136 U. S., 211. That was an action of debt brought in this court by the United States against the State of North Carolina, upon certain bonds issued by that State. The State appeared, the case was determined here upon its merits, and judgment was rendered for the State. It is true that no question was made as to the jurisdiction of this court, and nothing was therefore said in the opinion upon that subject. But it did not escape the attention of the court, and the judgment would not have been rendered except upon the theory that this court has original jurisdiction of a suit by the United States against a State."

And it unquestionably arose and was passed upon in United States vs. Michigan, 190 U. S., pp. 379, 396, 406, which was a suit for the recovery of money, in which this court, Mr. Justice Peckham delivering its unanimous opinion, at page 396 held:

> "By its bill the United States invokes the original jurisdiction of this court for the purpose of determining a controversy existing between it and the State of Michigan. This court has jurisdiction of such a controversy, although it is not literally between two States, the United States being a party on the one side and a State on the other. This was decided in United States v. Texas, 143 U. S., 621, 642; 36 L. Ed., 285, 292; 12 Sup. Ct. Rep., 488."

Such was also the effect of the decision of the majority of the court in South Dakota vs. North Carolina, 192 U. S., p. 286; and there is nothing in the dissenting opinion of the minority of the court in that case inconsistent with the views for which we contend.

Again, we say that it seems to us the question is no longer a debatable one in this court.

(b) Is there anything in the contention that this court cannot hear and determine the questions presented in this case because it has, as is alleged, no power to render or enforce any final judgment or decree therein?

Let us see, first, what is the precise character of this suit and what is the relief sought, a total misconception of which must have occasioned the assignment of the ground of demurrer now being considered.

The main and real object of the suit is a settlement with West Virginia, and to this end a determination and adjudication by this court of the amount due by that State to Virginia, upon the state of facts set forth in the bill.

West Virginia having refused to have any accounting, or even to negotiate with Virginia upon the subject, it became necessary to invoke the equitable jurisdiction of this court in order that it might ascertain, determine, and adjudge the proportion of the debt of the original State which it would be equitable for West Virginia to pay.

The Commonwealth of Virginia would be loath to believe that any State of the American Union would disregard or disobey any decree of this, the tribunal selected and empowered by all of the States as the final arbiter of all civil controversies which may arise between them, and did not consider it necessary in any such case, or proper under the circumstances of this case, to insert in her bill a special prayer asking this court to summarily enforce its decree against West Virginia.

She cherishes the hope that there would never be any occasion to ask the court to award any execution or take any action for the purpose of enforcing such judgment as it shall render.

If such occasion should ever arise, it will be for the court to then decide by what process or further action it would proceed to execute its decree.

It will be time enough when the proper accounts have been taken, and the balance ascertained, and the sovereign State against whom such balance may be found has repudiated the liability and refused to pay such balance, to consider and decide whether the power resides in this court and the means are at its hand to enforce the payment of the amount so found to be due.

It is enough for present purposes to know that all the States in the Union have, by the Constitution of their general Government, covenanted and agreed in the most solemn form that "the judicial power shall extend to controversies between two or more States," and that "in all those cases in which a State shall be a party the Supreme Court shall have original jurisdiction."

> "The Constitution of the United States, with all the powers conferred by it on the General Government and surrendered by the States, was the voluntary act of the people of the several States, deliberately done, for their own protection and safety against injustice from one another."

Ableman vs. Booth, 21 How., p. 521.

"Some tribunal exercising such authority, is essential to prevent an appeal to the sword and a dissolution of the Government."

2 Story on Constitution, sec. 1681.

The Supreme Court hath exclusive jurisdiction in every controversy of a civil nature between two or more States.

Chisholm vs. Georgia, 2 Dall., 2d ed., p. 430.

These cases hold that questions of boundary, territorial right, and property rights of all kinds are proper for this jurisdiction.

2 Tucker's Constitution, p. 784.

Indeed it may be needless to consider at all the question of whether, when a decree shall be made ascertaining the amount due by West Virginia, on a full adjustment and accounting between the two States, how such amount can be obtained from the debtor State. We may accept as sound and true the statement made by Mr. Webster in his letter to Baring Brothers (Webster's Works, vol. 6, p. 539), that "the security for State loans is the plighted faith of the State as a political community, resting on the same basis as other contracts with established governments; that is to say, the good faith of the government making the loan, and its ability to fulfill engagements." We may admit that this is the only sanction and security on which an individual who is a public creditor may rely; that this arises on the creation of the debt and continues so long as the debt exists. We recognize that no sovereign State, of whatever form of government, can clothe an individual or another State with power to seize by force upon its treasury and appropriate its resources without regard to the needs, policies, or will of the debtor State.

Every day judgments are rendered by this court against the United States for money demands on appeals from the Court of Claims; but nowhere is power given to this court to award execution of fiere facias against the United States. Awards are made by high tribunals and commissions to whose arbitrament claims for money against empires, kingdoms, and republics have been submitted, but never has power been given to these courts to enforce by judicial process or physical force the payment or satisfaction of the amounts which they may ascertain to be due.

Only by appropriation, regularly made by the legislative branch of the Government, is provision ever made for the payment of claims, whether ascertained by judgment, award, or other legal form. To that branch of the Government alone may we look for the fulfillment of "the good faith of the Government."

We here invoke the exercise of a long-established ground of equitable jurisdiction when, on the case stated in the bill, we ask that an accounting be had, and that such other and further relief be granted as the nature of the case may require and in equity may be meet.

It is true that in the case of Gordon vs. United States the Supreme Court declined to take jurisdiction of the case on appeal from the final action of the Court of Claims, on the ground that no power had been conferred upon the court to enforce its judgment, Chief Justice Taney in the opinion saying:

> "nor can Congress authorize or require this court to express an opinion on a case where its judicial power could not be exercised and where its judgment would not be final and conclusive on the rights of the parties, and process of execution awarded to carry it into effect.
> "The award of execution is a part, and an essential part, of every judgment passed by a court exercising judicial power. It is no judgment, in the legal sense of the term, without it. Without such an award the judgment would be inoperative and nugatory, leaving the aggrieved party without a remedy," &c.

Gordon vs. United States (Appendix), 117 U. S., p. 697.

(Although a grave doubt exists as to the authenticity and accuracy of this alleged opinion.)

This language was used in considering and deciding a question of jurisdiction of the Court of Claims where the judicial power of the United States had not been conferred on it by Congress. It is not applicable to the question presented here, which is not as to the jurisdiction of the court, but as to its power to enforce its writ of execution against a State. The question here is not as to the power of the arm to strike, but as to the immunity of the object from wounds.

Whether property or funds of West Virginia within the jurisdiction of this court, other than property used distinctly for governmental purposes, would be liable to seizure, levy, garnishment, or sale in execution of or for the purpose of coercing compliance with any such decree is a question which we trust will never arise; for we are persuaded that any decree which this court shall render will be accepted by both parties as final and binding and will be respected and obeyed. But if a decree shall be rendered against West Virginia, and that State shall fail or refuse to respect it and to comply with its terms, it will be time enough then for this court to decide what farther action shall be taken in the enforcement of its decree.

The supreme court of Louisiana, in the case of Carter vs. State, 42 La. Annual, 930, in an opinion delivered by Judge Fenner, has shown why, from the character of the party, a writ of fieri facias should not be awarded, and cannot be enforced against a State.

"Legislative acts authorizing individuals to sue the State upon claims which the Legislature, for any cause, does not see fit to recognize and pay, have been of common occurrence in this and in other States. Their purpose and effect, as commonly understood, are undoubtedly nothing more than to refer to the judiciary the settlement of the questions of law and fact involved in the claims, and the determination, in the form of a judgment, of the rights of the parties. It is implied, as a matter of course, that the legislative power, after making such a reference, will accept and abide by the judicial determination, will recognize the judgment rendered as final and conclusive, and will, in due and ordinary course, make provision for the satisfaction thereof.

"That such was the interpretation of his remedy, adopted by the plaintiff himself, is evinced by his applications to successive General Assemblies for an appropriation to satisfy his judgment.

"But to assume that, by consenting to be sued, the Legislature intended to abdicate its constitutional function of controlling and administering the public funds and property and of appropriating them to such lawful purposes as it may deem best, and to delegate to the judicial department the power of seizing such property and applying it to the payment of a particular debt, would be, beyond measure, rash and unjustifiable. No such intention is expressed in the act or can be fairly implied from its terms; and we consider it beyond question that no such ever entered into the mind of any member of the legislative body. The incidents and appurtenances of ordinary jurisdiction have no application to a case like this. Undoubtedly jurisdiction granted to render judgments between parties subject to judicial power and control implies power to execute such judgments. But the sovereign is not subject to judicial power and control, except just so far as it has consented thereto; the moment the limit of that consent is reached the judiciary must instantly halt. Satisfied as we are that the Legislature has not consented and did not intend to consent to the execution of this judgment by writ of fieri facias, we are bound to deny such remedy.

"Counsel asks, of what use is the power to render judgment against the State, if the court is powerless to execute the judgment? That question was anticipated by Mr. Hamilton in the discussion of the Constitution of the United States before its final adoption. 'To what purpose,' he asked, 'would it be to authorize suits against sovereign States for the debts they owe? How could recoveries be enforced? It is evident that it could not be done without waging war against the contracting State.' Federalist, No. 81. He never dreamed that authorizing suit against a State would imply the right to issue fieri facias on the judgment.

"Puffendorff says: 'And if the prince gives the subject leave to enter an action against him in his own courts, the action itself proceeds rather upon natural equity than on municipal laws. For the end of the action is not to compel the prince to observe the contract, but to persuade him.'

"In England claims against the Crown might be prosecuted before certain courts, in the form of petitions of right, with the consent of the King, but it was held by Lord Mansfield that 'if there were a recovery against the Crown, application must be made to Parliament, and it would come under the head of supplies for the year.'"

Macbeth vs. Haldimand, 1 Durn. & East., 172.

We have examined all the authorities quoted by counsel, and find none of them to support his contention. We are quite certain that no precedent exists sustaining the issuance of a fieri facias on a judgment against a sovereign State in her own courts, though rendered with her own consent.

The only recourse for satisfaction is by application to the Legislature, with whom the judgment should surely have great persuasive force, but none compulsive.

In United States vs. North Carolina, 136 U. S., p. 211, supra, this court took jurisdiction of a suit brought by the United States against that State for money due upon bonds held by the United States.

In United States vs. Michigan, 190 U. S., pp. 377-406, already referred to, this court again took jurisdiction of a suit against Michigan for the recovery of money. At the conclusion of its opinion, at page 406, this court unanimously decided that—

> "There must be a judgment overruling the demurrer, but as the defendant may desire to set up facts which it might claim would be a defense to the complainant's bill, we grant leave to the defendant to answer up to the first day of the next term of this court. In case it refuses to plead further, the judgment will be in favor of the United States for an accounting, and for the payment of the sum found due thereon."

Every writ, process, and remedy which would be available for the enforcement of such a judgment, or for the decree prayed for by the plaintiff in United States vs. North Carolina, 136 U. S., p. 211, supra, would be available for the enforcement of a decree in this case adjudicating the amount of West Virginia's equitable contributive share of the ante-bellum debt of Virginia.

If such decree in United States vs. North Carolina, or the judgment directed in United States vs. Michigan, could not be summarily or effectively enforced, then it may be that a final decree in this case cannot be so enforced.

But it is equally true, and it is a truth which should conclusively dispose of this ground relied upon in the demurrer, that if the inability of this court to award any execution or frame any writ which would enable the United States to enforce any such decree or judgment against North Carolina or against Michigan did not defeat the jurisdiction of this court in the suits against those States, a similar inability to summarily enforce a decree in this case against West Virginia by execution, levy and sale cannot defeat the jurisdiction of this court in this suit against that State for a settlement, ascertainment, and adjudication of the state of the accounts between the two States.

It is impossible by any conceivable process of right reasoning to apply any principle to the case at bar which would defeat the jurisdiction of this court, upon the ground here discussed, which would not have deprived this court of its jurisdiction in each of the cases just considered.

And so upon this alleged ground of demurrer we conclude that the bill presents a controversy between the plaintiff and defendant States justiciable and solvable in this court, and that the jurisdiction of the court will not be defeated because it may be that the plaintiff may not be able to collect from the defendant, or this court may be unable to compel the defendant to actually pay such sum as the court may adjudge and decree to be due by the defendant.

To the third ground assigned in defendant's demurrer, namely,

> "That it appears by said bill that the plaintiff herein sues as trustee for the benefit of a number of individuals who are the alleged owners of certain certificates in the said bill set forth and described," our reply is that this assignment is founded upon mistake. It is not true that Virginia sues as trustee for the individuals mentioned or for any other persons. She sues in her own name and for her own benefit, in vindication of her own rights and for her own protection.

It is true that if the relief which she seeks is accorded her it will not only enure to her benefit, but necessarily to the benefit of all of the creditors of the undivided State, as well those who have deposited their unsatisfied bonds in her keeping as those who have never funded the bonds of the original State held by them; as well also those whose bonds and certificates are represented by the "depositing committee," who made the contract which is copied in the bill, as those whose bonds and certificates have not been so deposited. It is true that the amount of the unfunded bonds and of said certificates which are not represented by said "depositing committee" is comparatively small, but they aggregate over a million dollars. Whether their holdings are large or small, this suit must necessarily enure to their benefit, as it must also to the benefit of all of the unsatisfied creditors of Virginia, for the reason that Virginia cannot obtain the exoneration to which she is entitled unless West Virginia's equitable share of liability upon every bond and obligation of the undivided State shall be ascertained and adjudicated.

Indeed, a little reflection will show it to be true, that the amount and extent of West Virginia's liability in respect to any one of the original bonds representing Virginia's ante-bellum debt could not be ascertained without at the same time by the same token ascertaining her aliquot liability as to all of the others of those bonds.

It will be seen at once that this is true, for under the Wheeling ordinance and the first constitution of West Virginia, framed and adopted in pursuance and effectuation of that ordinance, and under the contract thereby created between Virginia and West Virginia, it would be impossible to determine what part of any particular bond West Virginia is legally and equitably bound to pay without first ascertaining what is the equitable proportion of the entire ante-bellum indebtedness of the undivided State.

And so no suit could be brought by Virginia against West Virginia; and, indeed, if an individual could legally institute and prosecute such a suit, no suit could be brought by any individual holder of a single one or any larger number of the bonds of the original State against West Virginia for a settlement and be prosecuted to a finality without an ascertainment of West Virginia's share of the entire indebtedness.

But Virginia's status in reference to this suit and her relation to the bonds deposited with her and the relief she seeks, and to which the bill shows her to be entitled in respect to those bonds and to the whole case, have been already fully discussed in the foregoing part of this brief and they need not be further treated here.

It is true that in the prayer for general relief Virginia asks that—

> "all proper accounts be taken to determine and ascertain the balance due from the State of West Virginia to your oratrix in her own right and as trustee as aforesaid."

But this, we submit, does not convert the suit which she has brought in her own name and right into a suit by her as trustee; for, in the settlement of the accounts which this court may hereafter direct to be taken between Virginia and West Virginia it will be convenient, if not necessary, in the ascertainment of West Virginia's contributive proportion of the original public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia to show the amounts due to Virginia in her own right and also as trustee. Indeed, the prayer of the bill for the ascertainment of the amount due by West Virginia upon the bonds held by Virginia as trustee might be omitted without impairing the character and effect of the bill.

The paramount and controlling equity which Virginia asserts and relies on, is her right to have a settlement and accounting between West Virginia and herself of all the matters growing out of the partition of her territory and the adjustment and determination of the respective rights and liabilities of the two States. This, we submit, is Virginia's right, and it is not affected by any questions that may be suggested as to the disposition she may make of whatever amount may be decreed by this court to be due to her.

It may be true that she has pledged in advance the full amount of any such recovery to the payment ratably of certain of her old debts, or even that she has made a declaration of trust as to such amount in favor of those creditors; but those are matters which cannot be considered on this demurrer. They are in nowise involved in the ground of equitable jurisdiction invoked by this bill. Virginia's right to compel contributions from West Virginia to the satisfaction of a common liability cannot be impaired or at all affected by the fact that Virginia has declared her purpose to apply the amount recovered to the payment of her debts.

They are matters which may, and doubtless will, be laid before the master to whom the settlement and statement of the account is intrusted, or they may have to be considered and passed on by this court, in the directions it may give to the master for his guidance in the execution of the order of reference; but they form no proper subject for consideration or action by the court at this stage of the case. The only question presented for decision now is, Has Virginia shown by her bill a proper case for the relief asked, of an accounting and for contribution from West Virginia?

The fourth assignment of grounds of demurrer is so general in its terms that it is difficult to make to it a specific reply. It is as follows:

> "That the said bill does not state facts sufficient to entitle the Commonwealth of Virginia to the relief prayed for, or to any relief, either in her own right or as trustee for the owners of the certificates therein set forth and described."

This contention rests largely upon the same grounds upon which the second assignment is based, and the reply to it is very much the same, which is a conclusive answer to that assignment, and the importance of the case will justify some iteration in stating this reply.

The case stated in the bill must on this demurrer be taken to be true as to the facts charged. Among the facts charged are the following, viz:

1. That the restored State of Virginia, in convention assembled, did, on the 20th day of August, 1861, adopt an ordinance:

> "To provide for the formation of a new State out of the portion of the territory of this State."

That section 9 of that ordinance was as follows, viz:

> "9. The new State shall take upon itself a just proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia prior to the first day of January, 1861, &c., as above quoted."

2. That on the 31st of December, 1862, the Congress of the United States, by act, provided that the new State, thus formed in pursuance of said ordinance, should be admitted into the Union by the name of West Virginia.

3. That on the 20th of June, 1863, the State of West Virginia was accordingly admitted.

4. That by act of the General Assembly of the restored State of Virginia, passed February 3, 1863, all property—real, personal, and mixed—owned by Virginia, but situated within the proposed boundaries of West Virginia, was granted and transferred to West Virginia upon the condition, viz, that—> "The State of West Virginia shall duly account for the same in the settlement hereafter to be made with this State," &c.

5. That under and by virtue of said act there was actually received and enjoyed by the State of West Virginia property of the Commonwealth of Virginia amounting in value to several millions of dollars.

6. That by act of the General Assembly of the restored State of Virginia, passed February 4, 1863, there was appropriated to the State of West Virginia from the public moneys of Virginia the sum of $150,000; and there was further appropriated "all moneys not otherwise appropriated then" and that may come into the treasury up to the time when the State of West Virginia shall become one of the United States.

7. That by section 8 of article 8 of the constitution framed and adopted by the State of West Virginia, and under and in accordance with and by reason of which she was admitted into the Union of States, it was provided:

> "8. An equitable proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia prior to the first day of January, 1861, shall be assumed by this State and the legislature shall ascertain the same as soon as may be practicable—and provide for the liquidation thereof by a sinking fund sufficient to pay the accruing interest and redeem the principal within thirty-four years."

8. That the legislature of West Virginia never ascertained the amount of West Virginia's "equitable proportion" of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia prior to the first day of January, 1861; that the State of West Virginia has never accounted for the property of the Commonwealth of Virginia which was turned over to and received by her, amounting in value to several millions of dollars; that the State of West Virginia has failed and refused through a period of forty years, and in the face of repeated solicitations on the part of Virginia, to enter upon any settlement of the accounts between herself and Virginia, but has oftentimes and but recently, through one or the other of the two houses of her legislature, declared that she would not recognize any liability whatever as resting upon her to the Commonwealth of Virginia.

Wherefore, and by reason of the matters of fact aptly charged in the bill, it is manifest that a controversy is presented between the Commonwealth of Virginia and the State of West Virginia to which the judicial power of the United States extends and as to which this court has original jurisdiction.

West Virginia obtained the consent of the restored State of Virginia to the erection upon the territory of Virginia of this new State, and she procured the aid of the Senators and Representatives of Virginia in Congress in having her invested with sovereignty and admitted into the Union upon the express terms of the "Wheeling ordinance," which bound her to "take upon herself a just proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia."

West Virginia obtained admission into the Union of States on an express undertaking in her constitution that—

> "An equitable proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia, prior to the first day of January, 1861, shall be assumed by this State."

West Virginia received and applied to her own uses property belonging to the Commonwealth of Virginia to the amount in value of several millions of dollars, on the express condition that she would "duly account for the same in the settlement hereafter to be made with this State."

Hence it is evident that the "demand" referred to in this branch of the first ground of demurrer is not, as there assumed, "a simple demand for money," but it is a prayer that the accounting, so solemnly promised, may now be had, under the direction of this court.

The bill presents a state of facts from which it appears that the case is one for the exercise of the equitable jurisdiction of account upon some of the most important grounds upon which that jurisdiction can be invoked, according to the authorities and precedents.

(a) There have been in the first place complicated transactions running back to the creation of this new State, and back of that for about thirty years, embracing numerous loans made by the original State of Virginia and a large number of expenditures of the money thus borrowed in the construction of internal improvements outside and inside the territory now constituting West Virginia.

Any such settlement would necessitate, first, an ascertainment of the amount of the public debt of Virginia as of January 1, 1861, a matter which in itself would require the services of a skillful and painstaking accountant.

There would also have to be an ascertainment of a great multitude of items of expenditure made by the old State within the limits of what is now West Virginia, and of a vast number of payments made in the shape of taxes by the people living in that territory towards the support of the State government, in each case, from the date of the inception of the State debt down to the 1st of January, 1861.

There would have to be, moreover, a determination of what was the proportion of the general expenses of the State government equitably chargeable against the counties and cities now constituting West Virginia during the same period. All of this, and more than is indicated here, would have to be ascertained in order to furnish the data upon which to ascertain the just proportion of the debt of the Commonwealth which West Virginia can be required or expected to pay upon the basis prescribed in the Wheeling ordinance.

These complicated statements, and the accounting necessary to evolve from them accurately, fairly, and justly the share of the common indebtedness which can be equitably assigned to West Virginia, alone would furnish an amply sufficient justification for a resort to a court of equity for an account.

But, in addition to this ground, there are others which even more emphatically call for the equitable relief to which the bill shows the plaintiff to be entitled.

(a) Prominent among these is the plaintiff's right to contribution. The basis of this right has been already fully stated in this brief, and in the bill. (See paragraph XVI, p. 16 of the bill.)

As to the right to invoke the aid of a court of equity to establish the right to contribution, see Wills vs. Hubbell's Adm'r, 2 Johns. Chy. R., 401.

(b) Another ground for equitable jurisdiction recognized by all of the authorities upon equitable jurisprudence and practice is the plaintiff's right to exoneration upon the facts stated in the bill and already fully stated in the former part of this brief.

(c) Another ground for equitable relief shown by the bill is the accounting necessary to ascertain what money and property, stocks, and other assets of Virginia were transferred to and received by West Virginia under the acts of the General Assembly of Virginia of February 3 and 4, 1863. (See pp. 4, 5, and 6, paragraphs VIII and IX of the bill.)

(d) Another ground for the exercise of equitable jurisdiction shown by the bill is the avoidance of a multiplicity of suits. Virginia sustains, as appears from the bill, various associated relations in respect to West Virginia, all affecting the property and pecuniary rights of the two States, all growing out of the formation of the new State, closely related to the partition of the territory and property and the apportionment of the common indebtedness of the undivided

State, and all necessarily factors to be considered in making any satisfactory or final settlement between the two States.

First. Virginia holds obligations and evidences of indebtedness of the undivided State great in number and large in aggregate amount, paid off or retired by her, doubtless, at different times and under variant circumstances, but each of them giving her a claim against West Virginia to be reimbursed to the extent of West Virginia's liability therefor.

Second. She is entitled to have West Virginia make proper remuneration to her or give her proper credit for the money and property of Virginia which West Virginia received under the acts of February 3 and 4, 1863.

Third. She is entitled to exoneration to the extent of West Virginia's equitable liability upon the various transactions set forth in the bill, hereinbefore fully stated.

It is not only proper, but it is alike West Virginia's and Virginia's right and to their interest, to have the settlement of all of these associated claims and transactions made in one suit, instead of the parties being harassed by a number of suits for the equitable adjustment of matters which can be far more satisfactorily, intelligently, and fairly considered and adjudicated in one suit.

The fifth ground assigned in the amended demurrer—

> "That it does not appear by said bill that the Attorney-General has ever been authorized to institute and prosecute this suit in the name of the Commonwealth of Virginia in her own right, but only as trustee for the use and benefit of the owners of certain certificates mentioned in the act of March 6, > 1900, which is referred to and made part of said bill," is refuted by the bill. In support of this statement it is only necessary to refer to the following parts of the bill.

The act of the General Assembly of Virginia approved March 6, 1900, printed at pages 41-42 of the bill, entitled

> "An act to provide for the settlement with West Virginia of the proportion of the public debt of the original State of Virginia proper to be borne by West Virginia, and for the due protection of the Commonwealth in the premises," in the second section thereof authorized the Virginia Debt Commission, appointed under the joint resolution of March 6, 1894, upon certain conditions mentioned in that section,

> "by and with the advice and approval of the Attorney-General of Virginia to take such action and institute such proceedings on behalf of the State as may in the judgment of the commission and the Attorney-General be needful and proper to protect the interest of the State, and bring about and carry into effect a settlement as aforesaid."

The bill avers (paragraph xx, p. 11) that—

> "This suit has been instituted at the request and direction of said commission, and in strict conformity with the provisions of said act of March 6, 1900."

The exhibits filed with and as part of the bill, and particularly the report made by said commission to the General Assembly of Virginia on the 9th of January, 1906, Exhibit No. 8, pages 43-50 of the bill, prove the truth of this allegation, though its truth, of course, cannot be questioned by the demurrant.

The sixth ground of demurrer assigned in the amended demurrer is:

> "That the said bill does not sufficiently and definitely set forth the claims and demands relied upon, but the allegations thereof are so indefinitely (sic) and uncertain that no proper answer can be made thereto."

The bill, with as much exactness and particularity as is possible under the circumstances, sets forth with much detail the facts upon which the plaintiff claims to be entitled to relief.

It is as full and precise in asserting the demands which it asserts against the defendant as it is reasonably practicable to make those allegations without first having had the accounting with the defendant which is the primary relief for which the bill prays.

If Virginia could, without such an accounting with West Virginia, state with definiteness just what is the sum West Virginia should pay to Virginia, an action of assumpsit might have sufficed; but no remedy at law could give her the relief to which she is entitled by way of exoneration, nor is there any adequate remedy at law by which the complicated and more or less intricate accounts can be so digested and stated upon equitable principles as to reach a result which will be just to the parties.

The seventh assignment made by defendant's amended demurrer is:

> "That the allegations in the said bill are not sufficient to entitle the plaintiff therein, either in her own right or as trustee, to an account or to a discovery from this defendant."

This has been already answered in the answers made to other alleged objections to the bill. The plaintiff's right to an account is unquestionable upon any one of the several grounds already discussed; and a plaintiff is entitled to discovery in any case in which any right to equitable relief exists, and the defendant is in possession of any information, documents, or records which may throw any light upon the questions at issue or facilitate a just solution of those questions.

The eighth and last ground of demurrer assigned is:

> "That the said bill does not contain any prayer for a judgment or decree or any other final relief against this defendant."

This objection is possibly even more technical than some of the others presented in the demurrers.

It was not necessary under the English chancery practice, adopted by this court in 1792 for the guidance and direction of suitors and practitioners therein, to have any prayer at all for special relief.

Under the prayer for general relief the plaintiff could obtain all such relief as he was found by the chancellor to be entitled to upon the state of facts alleged in his bill and established by his proofs.

> "The old bills in chancery did not contain any special statement of relief, but only what is called the prayer for general relief." * * *
> Adams' Eq., m. p. 309.
> Mitford's Pleading, m. p. 39.
> Cook vs. Martin, 2 Atk., p. 141.

Under later practice in England, the prayer for general relief was still held to be sufficient, though it became the uniform practice to insert a special prayer, and to conclude with the prayer for general relief.

Adams' Eq., m. p. 309.

But there are prayers in the bill for special relief, namely,

> "that the said State of West Virginia may be made a party defendant to this bill, and required to answer the same, that all proper accounts may be taken to determine and ascertain the balance due from the State of West Virginia to your oratrix, in her own right and as trustee as aforesaid; that the principles upon which such accounting shall be had may be ascertained and declared, and a true and proper settlement made of the matters and things above recited and set forth; that such accounting be had and settlement made under the supervision and direction of this court by such auditor or master as may by the court be selected and empowered to that end, and that proper and full reports of such accounting and settlement may be made to this court; that the State of West Virginia may be required to produce before such auditor or master, so to be appointed, all such official entries, documents, reports and proceedings as may be among her public records or official files and may tend to show the facts and the true and actual state of accounts growing out of the matters and things above recited and set forth, in order to a full and correct settlement and adjustment of the accounts between the two States; that this court will adjudicate and determine the amount due to your oratrix by the State of West Virginia in the premises;'

These prayers not only ask for the specific relief stated, but that "the court will adjudicate and determine the amount due to your oratrix by the State of West Virginia."

An adjudication is a solemn judgment of a court. The word "adjudicate" is defined to mean:

> "To determine in the exercise of judicial power; to pronounce judgment in a case" (Anderson's Dict. of Law).
>
> "Synonymous with adjudge in its strictest sense" (Abbott's L. Dict.).
>
> "To determine judicially; try and decide; adjudge" (Standard Dictionary).

So a prayer for an adjudication by the court is a prayer for a judgment.

But such a prayer is unnecessary in a bill invoking the chancery jurisdiction of account.

The judgment or decree upon the account when taken and confirmed by the court is a necessary incident to the relief sought:

> "for it is implied if not expressed in the decree to account that the balance shall be paid to the party entitled."
> 1 Madd Chy. Pr.; title, Account, p. 86.

But where there is a prayer for special relief which does not adequately define or even inaccurately state the relief to which the plaintiff is shown upon the case presented to be equitably entitled, such relief as is adequate and appropriate to the case can and should be granted by the court.

1 Daniell's Chy. Pr., ed. 1846, p. 434.

The modern English practice is > "to pray particular relief, though if the particular relief prayed for in the bill cannot be given exactly as prayed, the court will assist the particular prayer under the general prayer; but relief inconsistent with the specific relief prayed, cannot be given under the general prayer."

>
> 2 Madd Chy., m. p. 172.
> Beaumont vs. Beaumont, 5 Ves., p. 495.
> Muckleston and Brown, 6 Ves., p. 52.

The proposition asserted in this eighth assignment is negatived by repeated decisions of this court.

It will be noted that the bill contains prayers for special relief and also a prayer for "all such other, further and general relief as the nature of the case may require and to equity may seem meet."

In English vs. Foxhall, 2 Peters, p. 612, this court declared that—

> "There is no doubt but that, under the general prayer, other relief may be granted than that which is particularly prayed. But such relief must be agreeable to the case made by the bill."

And in Watts and others vs. Waddle and others, 6 Peters, pp. 389-403, this court said:

> "Although there is no specific prayer in the bill to be paid the rents and profits, yet the court think that under the general prayer this relief can be granted. Under this prayer any relief may be given for which the basis is laid in the bill."

And in Walden, &c., vs. Boley and others, 14 Peters, pp. 164-5, this court decided that—

> "A court of equity cannot act upon a case which is not fairly made by the bill and answer. But it is not necessary that these should point out in detail the means which the court shall adopt in giving relief. Under the general prayer of relief, the court will often extend relief beyond the specific prayer, and not exactly in accordance with it."
>
> See also, to same effect—
> Boone vs. Chiles, 10 Peters, p. 177.
> Stevens vs. Gladding, 17 How., p. 455.
> Georgia vs. Stanton, 6 Wall., p. 50.
> Texas vs. Hardenburg, 10 Wall., p. 86.
> Jones vs. Van Doren, 130 U. S., p. 692.
> Hayward vs. Eliot Nat. Bank, 96 U. S., p. 611.
> Lockhart vs. Leeds, 195 U. S., pp. 427-437.

In the case cited this court decided that—

> "There is nothing in the intricacy of equity pleading that prevents the plaintiff from obtaining the relief under the general prayer, to which he may be entitled upon the facts plainly stated in the bill. There is no reason for denying his right to relief, if > the plaintiff is otherwise entitled to it, simply because it is asked under the prayer for general relief, and upon a somewhat different theory from that which is advanced under one of the special prayers."

These authorities would seem to unquestionably establish the sufficiency of the prayers for relief in the bill, and to effectively dispose of the eighth ground of objection laid in the amended demurrer.

The grounds of objection to the bill alleged in the original demurrer have not been noticed, for the reason that they are all merged in or covered by the amended demurrer.

Upon the whole case presented, it is respectfully submitted that the demurrers should be overruled, and the defendant required to answer the plaintiff's bill.

NOTICE.

TO THE COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA AND WILLIAM A. ANDERSON, Attorney General:

You are hereby, notified that the defendant, The State of West Virginia, will, on Monday, February 25, 1907, or as soon thereafter as the motion can be made, ask leave of the court to file an amended demurrer in the above-entitled cause. A copy of said proposed amended demurrer is hereto attached.

To the Honorable the Chief Justice and the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States:

Your petitioner, The State of West Virginia, one of the United States of America, by William M. O. Dawson, Governor, and Clarke W. May, Attorney General, humbly prays leave to file the sworn amended demurrer herewith presented to the bill of complaint in the above-entitled cause, and asks that a day may be fixed by your Honors for the hearing of the same.

And, as in duty bound, your petitioner will ever pray.

vs.
STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA.

AMENDED DEMURRER.

The defendant, The State of West Virginia, by William M. O. Dawson, Governor, and Clarke W. May, Attorney General, of said State, not confessing or acknowledging all or any of the matters and things in the said complainant's bill to be true in manner and form as the same are set forth and alleged, or in any way or manner, presents this amended demurrer thereto, and for cause of demurrer shows:

First. That it appears by said bill that there is a misjoinder of parties plaintiff and a misjoinder of causes of action. The said bill is brought by the Commonwealth of Virginia to recover debts alleged to be due to her in her own right from the defendant for property and money alleged to have been transferred and delivered to the defendant under certain acts of the legislature passed in 1863, and also, as trustee for the owners of certain certificates mentioned and described in said bill, to have an accounting to ascertain and declare the amount claimed to be due from the defendant as her just proportion of the public debt of the plaintiff prior to the first day of January, 1861.

Second. That this court has no jurisdiction of either the parties to or the subject-matter of this action, because it appears by the said bill that the matters therein set forth do not constitute, within the meaning of the Constitution of the United States, such a controversy, or such controversies, between the Commonwealth of Virginia and the State of West Virginia as can be heard and determined in this court, and this court has no power to render or enforce any final judgment or decree thereon.

Third. That it appears by said bill that the plaintiff herein sues as trustee for the benefit of a number of individuals who are the alleged owners of certain certificates in the said bill set forth and described.

Fourth. That the said bill does not state facts sufficient to entitle the Commonwealth of Virginia to the relief prayed for, or to any relief, either in her own right or as trustee for the owners of the certificates therein set forth and described.

Fifth. That it does not appear by said bill that the Attorney General has ever been authorized to institute and prosecute this suit in the name of the Commonwealth of Virginia in her own right, but only as trustee for the use and benefit of the owners of certain certificates mentioned in the act of March 6, 1900, which is referred to and made part of said bill.

Sixth. That the said bill does not sufficiently and definitely set forth the claims and demands relied upon, but the allegations thereof are so indefinitely and uncertain that no proper answer can be made thereto.

Seventh. That the allegations in the said bill are not sufficient to entitle the plaintiff therein, either in her own right or as trustee, to an account or to a discovery from this defendant.

Eighth. That the said bill does not contain any prayer for a judgment or decree or any other final relief against this defendant.

Wherefore, and for divers other good causes of demurrer in the said bill, this defendant demurs thereto and humbly demands the judgment of this court whether she shall be compelled to make any further or other answer to the said bill, and prays to be henec dismissed with her costs and charges in the matter most wrongfully sustained.

——— ———,
Governor of West Virginia.

——— ———,
Attorney General of West Virginia.

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA,
County of Kanawha, ss:

This day there personally appeared before me, the undersigned, clerk of the Supreme Court of Appeals of the State of West Virginia, William M. O. Dawson, Governor of said State, and Clark W. May, Attorney General of said State, representing the said State of West Virginia, the defendant in the above-entitled cause, and whose names as such are signed to the foregoing amended demurrer, and, being by me duly sworn, say that they are respectively the officers of the defendant, the said State of West Virginia, as above set out, and that the foregoing amended demurrer is not interposed for delay and that the same is true in point of fact.

Given under my hand as clerk of said court and the official seal thereof — day of October, 1906.

——— ———,
Clerk of the Supreme Court of Appeals of the State of West Virginia.

I, Clarke W. May, Attorney General of the State of West Virginia, hereby certify that in my opinion the foregoing amended demurrer is well founded in point of law.

——— ———,
Attorney General of West Virginia.

MEMORANDUM.—Because the time allowed them was scant, the counsel for the Commonwealth agreed to apportion certain portions of this reply brief between themselves. Hence it appears as one brief, though in two parts.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.

OCTOBER TERM, 1906.

Original, No. 7.

vs.

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA.

REPLY BRIEF OF COUNSEL FOR VIRGINIA UPON THE DEMURRERS TO THE BILL.

I.

The bill is not demurrable on the ground of multifariousness, either because of uniting any two or more distinct and separate matters or grounds for equitable jurisdiction, or upon the alleged ground that it blends in the same bill two causes of action, one of which is of equitable and the other of legal cognizance.

(1) None of the grounds for equitable relief shown by the bill are distinct and separate and independent of the other grounds assigned in the bill for the relief prayed. All of the demands for relief shown by the bill are intimately connected with each other and are properly to be considered in stating any account and making any settlement between the two States.

It cannot be fairly contended that any item of charge against West Virginia suggested by the bill is not a proper item to be brought into any statement which shall fairly ascertain the true state of accounts between the parties and the amount which the plaintiff is equitably entitled to recover from the defendant.

It is manifest that the equity for contribution and the equity for exoneration, to which the bill plainly shows that the plaintiff is entitled, are, for the purposes and with reference to all the legitimate objects of this suit, so associated together and so connected with each other that it would be impossible for the court to give complete relief, and to ascertain the amount for which the plaintiff has a just claim against West Virginia without bringing all of these matters into the account.

It would be impossible fairly and justly to state the account between these parties without bringing into it the sums with which West Virginia is justly chargeable on account of the moneys and property constituting integral parts of the assets of the undivided State which West Virginia has received under the acts of the restored government of Virginia passed in 1863.

(2) But if, applying rigidly an extreme technical rule of pleading, it could be claimed that the demand which Virginia has a right, as shown by paragraph VIII of her bill, to make of the defendant imports a legal cause of action, and could not for any reason be properly cognizable by a court of chancery in making a final settlement between the parties to this cause, then, according to the rule of common sense and common justice, well settled by the authorities, the averment of such a cause of action in the bill will not be fatal to the maintenance of the suit, but will be treated as surplusage by a court of equity, and either ignored in its consideration of the case or will be by amendment stricken from the bill without prejudice.

We are saved any necessity for any further discussion of this phase of the argument of defendant's counsel by the admirable statement of the law governing this subject, accurately expressed in the work upon "Equity Procedure" of which the learned counsel, Mr. Charles E. Hogg, who opened the oral argument for West Virginia and is upon her brief, is the author.

The principles governing this subject, as stated in Hogg's Equity Procedure, edition of 1903, vol. 1, sec. 136, furnish a conclusive answer to the elaborate argument of the counsel for the defendant upon this branch of the case and are as follows:

> "SEC. 136. Courts of equity have declined to announce a general rule applicable to all cases of multifariousness, being guided by considerations of convenience in each particular case rather than by any absolute rule.. But there are certain cardinal principles which have been established by repeated and numberless decisions in the court of equity, and if borne in mind it will seldom if ever be found difficult to determine whether multifariousness exists in the particular case.
>
> "As to what these particulars are, all the adjudged cases agree.
>
> "From the numerous decisions relating to this matter, a few of which are cited in the foot-notes, the following principles may be safely declared to govern in questions of this character:
> "1. A bill will always be deemed multifarious where several matters joined in the bill against one defendant are so entirely distinct and independent of each other that the defendant will be compelled to unite in his answer and defense different matters wholly unconnected with each other, and as a consequence the proofs applicable to each would be apt to be confounded with each other, and great delay might be occasioned respecting matters ripe for hearing by waiting for proofs as to some other matters ready for hearing.

"2. It will be treated as multifarious where there is a demand of several matters of a wholly distinct and independent nature, in the same bill, rendering the proceedings oppressive because it would tend to load each defendant with an unnecessary burden of costs by swelling the pleadings with the statement of the several claims of the other defendant or defendants with which he has no connection.

"3. A bill against two or more defendants will be regarded as multifarious which also embodies a separate and distinct claim against one of the defendants only.

"4. A bill will not usually be regarded as multifarious when the matters joined in the bill, though distinct, are not absolutely independent of each other, and it will be more convenient to dispose of them in one suit.

"5. A blending of two causes of action in the same bill, one of which is of equitable cognizance and the other legal, will not render a bill multifarious, as the latter will be treated as mere surplusage and stricken from the bill and the cause retained as to the equitable ground of the suit." (Italics, here and elsewhere, ours.)

These propositions are amply supported by the authorities cited by the learned author and by the following:

Story's Eq. Pl., secs. 271-278, 280, 284, 531, 532.

Mitf., Eq. Pl., by Jeremy, 181, 182, notes a and b.

II.

The next ground of objection to the bill urged by defendant's counsel, which I will notice, is that the plaintiff has, as they allege, no interest in the subject-matter of the controversy and asks no substantive relief for herself.

This position of opposing counsel is based upon an extraordinary misapprehension of the bill.

(a) The bill shows that the plaintiff has a very large direct claim against the defendant because of the fact that the plaintiff has paid off and satisfied in full obligations and evidences of indebtedness of the undivided State, including interest from the dates of payment of the several items constituting said demand, considerably in excess of $25,000,000, and that for this Virginia has a just claim against West Virginia for contribution to the extent of West Virginia's equitable liability therefor.

See paragraph XVI, page 9 of the bill.

(b) The bill shows that it is not true in fact, as counsel argued, that Virginia has been released in respect to the unfunded portion of the bonds of the original State deposited with her under the act of 1871 and amounting, as appears from the exhibits printed at pages 73 and 90 of the bill, to $12,703,451.79, with interest on the principal sum thereof from July 1, 1871. As to this portion of the old debt of the State, Virginia has never been released, and her own highest court, in Greenhow vs. Vashon, 81 Va., 342-343, has so declared. In that case Judge Richardson, delivering the opinion of the court, quoting with approval the dictum of Judge Staples in Antoni vs. Wright, 22 Gratt., 864-5, says:

> "It is said that the creditor has released one-third of his debt. I do not so understand it, and I will hazard the assertion the creditor does not so construe the law. If this was the intention of the framers > of the act they have adopted an obscure and equivocal mode of expressing a plain and simple agreement. The creditor surrenders his bond and obtains a new one for two-thirds of his debt, and coupons for the interest. For the remaining one-third the bond is held in trust by the State, and a certificate is given him stating that payment will be provided for in accordance with such settlement as may be made with West Virginia. If that State is faithful to the obligations resting upon her the creditor will receive the other two-thirds also. On the other hand, if she repudiates these obligations there is no agreement or understanding absolving the State from the payment of such third. It is as much bound for the payment of the whole debt as before the passage of the funding bill."

And the Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia, in Higginbotham vs. The Commonwealth, 25 Gratt., 627, expressed substantially the same opinion. This ought to be conclusive of this particular question for the purposes of this demurrer.

But, independently of said decisions, we assert with absolute confidence in the unquestionable correctness of the proposition, that it is impossible to read the act of March 30, 1871, and particularly section 3 of said act, found at pages 14 and 15 of the bill, without seeing not only that Virginia is not released, but that she has solemnly contracted that payment of said unfunded one-third, with the interest due thereon, "will be provided for in accordance with such settlement as shall hereafter be had between the States of Virginia and West Virginia in regard to the public debt of the State of Virginia existing at the time of its dismemberment."

* * * * * * *

The manifest effect of the transaction was to continue in full force the liability upon the unfunded third of each of the bonds so deposited, both as against Virginia and against West Virginia, the only concession that the creditor made being that payment could not be expected or required of Virginia until a settlement should be had between the two States.

While the creditor, as the result of this arrangement, took the risk of such a settlement ever being made, it was none the less the duty of Virginia to do all that could be reasonably and fairly expected of her to bring about and effect such a settlement; and, her repeated efforts to that end having proved abortive by reason of the failure of West Virginia to meet her overtures, this suit has become necessary.

Her equity to maintain this suit in respect to the $12,700,000 of unfunded bonds deposited with her under the act of 1871 is based upon her right to exoneration to the extent of West Virginia's liability upon the indebtedness represented by those bonds.

By reason of the contract which her creditors have made with her, she has a further interest in maintaining this suit, viz., to obtain COMPLETE exoneration in respect to those unfunded bonds as to which she has been in no sense released, but can only be released by an adjudication of this court against West Virginia ascertaining West Virginia's aliquot liability on account of the said indebtedness.

(c) Nor is it true in any sense that Virginia has in any degree impaired her right to maintain this suit because she has agreed to turn over to her creditors entitled thereto the ratable proportion of any amount which she may obtain from West Virginia assignable to the holders of the unsatisfied obligations of the undivided State.

It cannot in any court of conscience impair a plaintiff's right to equity because her bill shows that it is her purpose to do equity.

Any recovery from West Virginia will, by the terms of Virginia's contract with the representatives of the creditors of the undivided State be ratably apportioned among all of the holders of the ante-bellum obligations of the original State, including Virginia as now constituted. The creditors other than Virginia will receive their pro rata share of such recovery in entire exoneration of Virginia, and Virginia will receive or retain the pro rata share of such recovery assignable to the obligations and evidences of indebtedness of the original State which she has paid in full, by way of equitable contribution to her.

It will be apparent from an examination of the contract between Virginia and the committee representing the certificates which she has issued, and which in turn represent the unsatisfied obligations of the undivided State, that, while the arrangements which Virginia has made with the common creditors or their representatives for her protection, and for their protection, with a view to their payment, and to her payment, and to her exoneration, enure alike to her benefit and to the benefit of the common creditors, West Virginia is not in the slightest degree prejudiced, nor are her interests or rights to any extent impaired by reason of any of these arrangements.

There were different stipulations in the certificates issued under the act of 1879, 1882, and 1892, in reference to the settlement of the public debt of Virginia, but they do not impair Virginia's right to maintain this suit.

III.

With strange persistency counsel for West Virginia insist that jurisdiction has not been conferred upon this court by the judiciary clauses of the Federal Constitution over controversies between two or more States involving directly or indirectly a demand for the payment of money.

Their contention is that—

Jurisdiction imports power not only to decide, but to grant adequate relief, and—

That this court is powerless to give adequate relief to the plaintiff upon the case stated by her, and—

That therefore this court can have no jurisdiction of this cause.

We have shown in our brief, already filed, for the plaintiff that this question has been repeatedly adjudicated in this court, against defendant's contention, in cases so analogous to the case at bar that it is impossible to distinguish them upon any ground of principle as to this particular question.

But we have a further sufficient reply to make to this contention.

The proposition of opposing counsel rests upon the assumption that this court cannot give adequate relief.

That is not true. The court can give all the relief that is in the nature of things appropriate to the case and all that is prayed for by the bill.

It can cause the account between the two States to be stated and an ascertainment and an adjudication of the equitable proportion of the public ante-bellum debt of Virginia to be borne by West Virginia to be had, and upon confirming the report made by its master in chancery can, and will, adjudge and decree the amount which West Virginia is equitably bound to pay on account of the common indebtedness of the original State.

This, as is shown by the bill and pointed out in our former brief, not only will give Virginia adequate, but will accord her complete, relief, because it will operate to exonerate her from any further liability on account of that indebtedness to the extent already plainly shown.

In further reply to this branch of argument of defendant's counsel, I beg leave to add to what has already been said upon that subject, that it has never been held by this court that no execution or process could under any circumstances be issued upon any judgment against a State upon any pecuniary demand.

Whether strictly private property of West Virginia, property owned for profit and charged with no public trusts or uses, property owned for some commercial purpose, or owned just as an individual might own such property, would be liable to levy, attachment, or sale under an execution issued under a decree of this court, is a question which we hope will never arise and can never arise unless West Virginia shall fail or refuse to respect a decree of this court and to comply with its terms.

It will be time enough then for this court to decide what further action, if any, shall be taken in enforcement of its decree.

We frankly say that we at present know of no property of defendant which would be liable to levy or sale under any execution issued by this court, but it is not very difficult to conceive of a condition of things in which West Virginia might own property within the jurisdiction of this court which would be liable to be subjected for the satisfaction of a decree in this case. I fully concede that only such property as was not held by that State for governmental purposes and not charged with any public trust could be subjected for the satisfaction of a decree of this court; but there may be circumstances under which property charged with a special trust for the satisfaction of the very debt claimed here, or property not charged with any public trust, belonging to the State of West Virginia and held by her, just as a private individual might hold such property, might be liable to be attached for the satisfaction of a decree of this court in this cause.

Tried by the same principles which have controlled this court and the State courts in respect to judgments entered against municipal corporations, there can be no question that the fact that an effective execution cannot be issued upon the judgment does not invalidate the judgment.

2 Dill., Munic. Corp., sec. 856.

The execution is in no sense and under no circumstances an essential part of the judgment.

Freeman on Judgments, sec. 2, and cases cited.

Whether a defendant has or has not any property on which a lawful execution could be validly levied does not at all affect the validity, though it may affect the value, of a judgment against him.

III.

I come now to consider the ground upon which Mr. Carlisle, the distinguished counsel for West Virginia who closed the oral argument of the case, seems in his brief and in his oral argument to mainly rely in his advocacy of the demurrers, though it is a ground not mentioned or suggested in either of the demurrers.

His contention is that by reason of the provisions of the alleged act of the General Assembly of Virginia, passed May 13, 1862, which were as follows:

> "That the consent of the legislature of Virginia be, and the same is hereby given to the formation and erection of the State of West Virginia, according to the boundaries and along the provisions set forth in the constitution for the said State of West Virginia, and the schedule thereto annexed proposed by the convention which assembled at Wheeling, on the twenty-sixth day of November, eighteen hundred and sixty-one."

and of the provisions of section 8 of article VIII of the constitution of West Virginia, which is in the following words:

> "8. An equitable proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia prior to the first day of January, 1861, shall be assumed by this State, and the legislature shall ascertain the same as soon as may be practicable and provide for the liquida> tion thereof by a sinking fund sufficient to pay the accruing interest and redeem the principal within thirty-four years."

a compact was created by which the legislature of West Virginia was constituted the sole tribunal to ascertain, adjudicate, and finally decide what was the equitable proportion of the public debt of the undivided State which West Virginia should assume and pay.

Upon this extraordinary contention counsel for the defendant seem now mainly to rest their case.

(a) We deny that the fact of such an alleged compact, not mentioned or suggested in the bill, can be relied on as ground of demurrer.

(b) We challenge the averment that any such act as the alleged act of May 13, 1862, was ever passed by any legislature of the Commonwealth of Virginia, and we crave oyer of the act, if it is to be relied on.

(c) If the meaning and effect contended for by the counsel for the defendant could be fairly given to the terms of section 1 of the said alleged act of May 13, 1862, then Virginia has a right to insist, and does insist, that said act shall be at least reasonably, if not strictly, construed.

Under no fair construction of that act can it possibly have any such legal effect, even upon the violent hypothesis of counsel for the defendant, for the reason that the alleged consent and agreement of the Commonwealth of Virginia, as therein expressed, was predicated upon the admission of West Virginia into the Union under the provisions of the constitution for the State of West Virginia, and the schedule thereto annexed, proposed by the convention which assembled at Wheeling on the twenty-sixth day of November, eighteen hundred and sixty-one, while the fact is that West Virginia never was admitted into the Union under that constitution, but was admitted under an amended constitution submitted to the people of West Virginia by an ordinance adopted by a convention thereof on the sixteenth of February, eighteen hundred and sixty-three, and pursuant to a further ordinance adopted by the said convention, entitled "An ordinance to provide for the organization of the State of West Virginia," passed February nineteenth, eighteen hundred and sixty-three, as will appear from the said constitution and ordinances of the State of West Virginia, published in the volume entitled "Constitution and Statutes of Virginia and West Virginia," printed pursuant to the act of the legislature of West Virginia passed February, twenty-sixth, eighteen hundred and sixty-six.

Non constat but that the consent of the legislature of Virginia would never have been given in manner and form as expressed in the alleged act of February thirteenth, eighteen hundred and sixty-two, if predicated upon the amended constitution, which was subsequently submitted to the people of West Virginia and received their sanction at the polls. This is by no means so strained a construction as that which counsel for the defendant would feign give to this act.

(d) But we deny utterly that by any fair or reasonable construction of the language of the first section of said act of May thirteenth, eighteen hundred and sixty-two, taken in connection with the provisions of the constitution proposed for the State of West Virginia by the convention which met in the city of Wheeling on the 26th of November, eighteen hundred and sixty-one, the language of that section was ever by any possibility intended by the legislature of Virginia or understood by the convention or by the people of West Virginia, or by any rational human being, to be, or to operate as, a SUBMISSION to the legislature of West Virginia of the question of the amount and proportion of the common debt of the original State which it was equitable and just for West Virginia to assume and pay; or that that enactment was ever intended by Virginia, or understood by West Virginia, or by any one, to bind Virginia to accept and abide by such determination of that matter as might be made by the legislature of West Virginia, however capricious or unjust its judgment might be; or was ever intended or understood by either of the parties, or by anybody, to constitute the legislature of one of the parties to the present controversy a tribunal with plenary power and exclusive jurisdiction to determine and decide anything in respect to the common ante-bellum debt of Virginia which would be binding upon Virginia; and yet such is the contention of the learned counsel, unless we misapprehend the language of their briefs.

All that could be reasonably inferred from the language used in said act of May thirteenth, eighteen hundred and sixty-two, taken in connection with the proposed constitution of West Virgina, was that Virginia gave her consent to the creation of the State of West Virginia out of her territory under that constitution and that section 8 of article VIII of the proposed constitution was designed not to create any new contractual relation or obligation between Virginia and West Virginia, but to be, and operate as, a mandate from the people of West Virginia to the legislature of West Virginia, requiring that legislature to assume an equitable proportion of the public debt of the original State, and as soon as practicable to ascertain the same and to provide for its liquidation by a sinking fund sufficient to pay the accruing interest and redeem the principal within thirty-four years, and that Virginia was willing that West Virginia should become a State of the Union under a constitution which contained those provisions and the other provisions expressed in the constitution as formulated and proposed prior to May thirteenth, eighteen hundred and sixty-two.

Reasonably construed, the purpose and effect of section 8 of article VIII was to place upon the new State an equitable proportion of the public debt of the old State and to require, and make it the duty of, the legislature of the new State to provide for the payment of West Virginia's equitable proportion of that debt, so that the entire amount, interest and principal, should be extinguished and paid off within the period of thirty-four years.

Nearly forty-four years have elapsed, and yet West Virginia has done nothing; has paid not one cent of the interest or the principal of the debt; but, on the contrary, has repudiated every obligation imposed upon her by the stipulations of the Wheeling ordinance which constituted the essential condition of her political existence.

(e) But the entire conception and theory of opposing counsel upon this subject have been demolished by the fact that West Virginia has repealed and abrogated the constitution under which she was admitted into the Union, by the adoption of a new constitution in eighteen hundred and seventy-two, which new constitution contains no provision whatever requiring that State to assume an equitable proportion, or any other proportion, of the ante-bellum debt of Virginia, or requiring the legislature of that State to provide for the payment of any portion of that debt.

See West Virginia Constitution, adopted in 1872; Code of West Virginia, 1887.

By her present constitution West Virginia ignores her obligation to pay any part of the debt, and if it had ever been true that anybody had ever attempted to constitute, or dreamed of constituting, the legislature of that State the supreme and ultimate arbiter between the two States as to the amount of the common debt which West Virginia should bear, West Virginia has not only failed and refused to discharge the duty as arbitrator, but she has actually abdicated any such function, duty, or power by repealing the constitution which counsel claim conferred such exclusive, supreme, and irreviewable jurisdiction upon her legislature.

IV.

The other points discussed in the briefs of defendant's counsel have been already anticipated and sufficiently met by the brief of counsel for Virginia already filed. A singular misapprehension of the language of the bill, and of the exhibits which constitute important parts thereof, has led counsel for the defendant into several errors of fact, two of which I deem it proper to notice. One is their contention that Virginia has ever made it a condition of any settlement or negotiation with West Virginia that that State should assume one-third of the ante-bellum debt of Virginia.

It was a condition of the negotiation and settlement authorized to be made by the resolution adopted by the General Assembly of Virginia on the 6th of March, eighteen hundred and ninety-four (pp. 39-40 of the bill), that Virginia was not to be charged with or assume more than two-thirds of the debt of the original State already assumed and provided for by her as her equitable proportion thereof.

But even under that resolution there was no condition whatever as to what West Virginia was to pay. That was left wide open as a matter for negotiation and adjustment.

And by the act of March sixth, nineteen hundred, pages 41 and 42 of bill, beyond the shadow of a doubt, plenary power was conferred upon that commission, with the approval of the Attorney General, to make any settlement and adjustment with the State of West Virginia which it might be practicable to make, and which the commission and the Attorney General might approve, provided the creditors, as defined in the act, agreed to accept such amount as might be recovered from West Virginia as a full settlement of all their claims against the State of Virginia.

Another inaccuracy of statement by opposing counsel, founded upon a like misapprehension, is that Virginia has submitted any ultimatum to West Virginia, or has made as a condition of an amicable adjustment with West Virginia, or of a negotiation or accounting with West Virginia looking to such amicable adjustment, any condition that West Virginia should assume and undertake to pay any particular proportion of the common debt or any sum whatever; and particularly are the counsel for the defendant in error upon this point as to the last effort made by Virginia to bring about an amicable settlement, as will be seen from an examination of the address of Mr. Randolph Harrison, made on behalf of the Virginia Debt Commission before the joint committees on finance of the West Virginia legislature on the first of February, nineteen hundred and five, and printed on pages 66-80 of the bill.

Among other things of interest to this cause and to the questions now submitted to the court which will be found in that admirable address, Mr. Harrison, on page 76 of the bill, said:

> "We do not ask that West Virginia shall commit herself as liable in any specific amount. We make no claim against her for any definite sum. We do not know what a statement of the account will show; if it shows that West Virginia is not liable for any amount, that will end the matter. We only ask that your State will, through the proper authorities, unite with Virginia in stating the account between the two States in order that the question of her liability, if any, may be authoritatively ascertained. The work of your commission will, of course, be subject to such action as West Virginia might deem proper in the premises."

I beg leave to commend the statement of Virginia's case, as made in that address, to the attention and consideration of the court. Its perusal will most conclusively demonstrate to this court the rightfulness and righteousness of the cause of action stated in the bill.

Respectfully submitted,

WILLIAM A. ANDERSON,
Attorney General of Virginia.

MARCH 14, 1907.

THE COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA

vs.

THE STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA.

REPLY BRIEF TO THE BRIEFS OF DEFENDANTS ON THE DEMURRER.

In the brief of Mr. Carlisle there appears, for the first time, the suggestion that this court cannot take jurisdiction of this case, because of a COMPACT alleged to have been entered into between the two States of Virginia and West Virginia, by which the question of the liability of West Virginia to Virginia on account of the public debt of the parent Commonwealth of Virginia was submitted to the arbitrament and award of the legislature of West Virginia.

The facts which it is claimed constitute such compact are as follows, viz.:

(1) That the constitution under which the State of West Virginia was admitted into the Union on June 20, 1863, contained the following provision:

> "An equitable proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia prior to the first day of January, 1861, shall be assumed by this State, and the legislature shall ascertain the same as soon as may be practicable and provide for the liquidation thereof by a sinking fund to pay the accruing interest and redeem the principal within thirty-four years."

(2) That on May 13, 1862, the legislature of (restored) Virginia passed an act entitled "An act giving the consent of the legislature of Virginia to the formation and erection of a new State within the jurisdiction of this State;" that by said act the consent of the legislature was given to the erection of the proposed new State "according to the boundaries and under the provisions set forth in the constitution for the said State of West Virginia, and the schedule thereto annexed, proposed by the convention which assembled at Wheeling on the twenty-sixth day of November, 1861."

(3) That the State of West Virginia was admitted into the Union on the 20th day of June, 1863, under the constitution framed by its convention, approved by the State of Virginia and the Congress of the United States. "And thus the consent of that body was given to all the provisions of the agreement and it became a legal and constitutional compact between the two States."

To this suggestion of a "compact" between the two States we have to say in reply:

1. That this is not among the grounds assigned in the formal demurrer heretofore filed in this cause, but is set up for the first time in the brief of Mr. Carlisle, and is again relied on in the brief of the Attorney General of West Virginia, subsequently filed.

2. That it is not a ground proper to be considered on demurrer, because it involves alleged facts which do not form any part of the case stated in the bill, viz., the fact that on May 13, 1862, the legislature of Virginia, by an act regularly passed, by a legislature duly assembled, consented to the erection of the new State of West Virginia "within the jurisdiction of this State." Not only is this alleged act not stated or admitted in the allegations of the bill, but it nowhere appears in the record of the case, nor is it set forth even in the briefs of counsel.

3. That the Commonwealth does not admit, but is prepared to deny, when opportunity is afforded it, that any such valid, constitutional act was ever passed by the legislature of Virginia, but that a demurrer affords no such opportunity to complainant to traverse the allegation of the existence of such act or of showing its non-existence.

4. That the existence and consequent effect of such an act should be asserted by a plea, to which replication might be made, or by answer, to which denial might be opposed, and thus an issue presented to which proper proof might be directed.

5. That from the official publications of the acts of assembly of the (restored) State of Virginia it distinctly appears that the regular session of that body adjourned sine die on February 13, 1863; that the constitution of the (restored) State of Virginia provides that extra sessions of the legislature may be convened only upon a proclamation of the governor of the Commonwealth calling the same; that while it does appear that the members of the General Assembly did assemble and were in session on the 13th of May, 1863, it does not appear from the proceedings of that body in the officially published journals of its proceedings that it had been called to meet by the proclamation of the governor.

6. That the constitution adopted by the convention of West Virginia, which assembled at Wheeling on the 26th of November, 1861, was not the constitution which was approved by Congress and under which the State of West Virginia was admitted into the Union, but that that Congress did refuse to admit the State into the Union under that constitution until the same was amended in certain indicated particulars, and the said constitution was accordingly so amended.

7. That even assuming all the facts relied on as constituting such a compact to be established, yet the conclusion deduced therefrom is fallacious and unsound, in this, viz., that the provision of the constitution of West Virginia that "an equitable proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia prior to the first day of January, 1861, shall be assumed by this State, and the legislature shall ascertain the same as soon as practicable, and provide for the liquidation thereof," &c., does not import or mean that there was conferred upon the legislature power to adjudicate the fact or the amount of such "equitable proportion," or that there was lodged in the legislature any discretion whatever in the matter of such ascertainment.

In construing this provision of a constitution we must have regard to the subject-matter and the policy and purpose of the framers as disclosed by the instrument in all its parts. Here was a new State, about to be formed within the jurisdiction of an old State. That old State had, on August 20, 1861, just three months before, by an ordinance, provided "for the formation of a new State out of the portion of the territory of this State," and it had by the same ordinance declared that "the new State shall take upon itself a just proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia prior to the first day of January, 1861, to be ascertained by charging to it all the State expenditures within the limits thereof, and a just proportion of the ordinary expenses of the State government since any part of this debt was contracted, and deducting therefrom the moneys paid into the treasury of the Commonwealth from the counties included within the new State during said period."

It is impossible to suppose that the new State should not have had this in mind when it framed its own constitution, and that when it provided that its legislature "shall ascertain the same as soon as practicable" it referred to the method of ascertainment prescribed by the Virginia convention in the very ordinance which provided for the creation of the new State. It seems to be at least reasonable to recognize that the ordinance of the Virginia convention and the provision of the West Virginia constitution should be taken as being in pari materia and construed together. It would then follow that what was meant by the expression the legislature "shall ascertain" was that the legislature should learn as soon as practicable the result of the method prescribed by the Wheeling ordinance, and then provide for the liquidation of the amount so ascertained.

It is simply preposterous to suppose that Virginia ever agreed to submit the matter of West Virginia's indebtedness to the arbitrament and award of West Virginia herself.

It should be enough to utterly repel this suggestion of a "compact" to inquire why, if such "compact" ever existed, in all the forty-three years that have elapsed since it was entered into, West Virginia has never, through her succession of governors, legislatures, and attorneys general, indicated and announced that it was upon such "compact" that she stood, and that to its terms and provisions she would hold Virginia, and why, through that long period, no step has ever been taken by West Virginia, through her legislature, to enter upon the performance of the duty which such "compact" imposed, or to notify Virginia that she stood ready and willing to enter upon such duty.

The suggestion that the case of Virginia vs. West Virginia, decided by this court thirty-six years ago, had restrained her from so doing is scarcely creditable to the intelligence of the inventor of that excuse.

Again, it is suggested in the briefs of demurrants, and was urged in oral argument, that Virginia had been released from all liability on account of the public debt of the old Commonwealth, evidenced by her bonds outstanding on January 1, 1861.

The grounds relied on to support this suggestion were indicated as follows, viz:

(1) That by the terms and provisions of the act of the General Assembly of Virginia of March 30, 1871, entitled "An act to provide for the funding and payment of the public debt" (Record, p. 13), and the acceptance thereof by the holders of the bonds of the Commonwealth, such holders released Virginia from all liability to them on account of the original public debt existing on January 1, 1861, and for which West Virginia was bound with Virginia, and they created with Virginia a new debt, evidenced by the new bonds of Virginia, for two-thirds of the amount of the old bonds, and accepted from Virginia a certificate showing that for the remaining one-third of such amount they would look for their payment only to such funds as might thereafter be obtained from West Virginia in satisfaction of her contributive share of the old public debt.

For reply to this ground we refer to the act itself. Its preamble fully recites its purpose. Its terms and provisions are contrived to strictly carry that purpose into effect. The third section of the act (Record, p. 14) shows that the bonds surrendered by the holders were not surrendered for cancellation and extinguishment of the obligations, save as to two-thirds of the amount of each bond so surrendered, and that as to the remaining one-third, which was estimated to be the amount of West Virginia's just and equitable proportion of the common debt, "the State of Virginia holds said bonds, so far as unfunded, in trust for the holder or his assignees." The bonds, as to such one-third, could not be "canceled" and at the same time "held in trust for the holder or his assignees." Virginia, by giving her new bond to take the place of the old bond, cannot be held to have paid her debt, but only to have substituted one security or evidence for another. A creditor, by surrendering an old bond and accepting a new one for the same debt from the debtor, has not received payment or satisfaction of the debt, unless such was the plain intention of the parties. The act itself as well as the certificate issued under it (Record, p. 72) show that such was not the intention.

(2) That by the act of the General Assembly of Virginia of March 28, 1879 (Record, p. 16), it was expressly provided, in the seventh section (Record, p. 19), "The acceptance of the said certificates for West Virginia's one-third, issued under this act, shall be taken and held as a full and absolute release of the State of Virginia from all liability on account of the said certificates."

Observe, the release of Virginia is not from her liability on account of the old bonds surrendered by the holder. These old bonds still are to remain, so far as the unfunded one-third of their amount, held in trust for the holder, but the release here provided for is expressly "on account of these certificates," by which was plainly meant that Virginia would not recognize these certificates as creating any distinct and substantive evidence of indebtedness on her part. They should not be construed to be causes of action against her. The holder, by surrendering his bond to be held in trust for him by Virginia, did thereby agree to await the result of Virginia's efforts to obtain from West Virginia the amount of her "just and equitable proportion of the public debt," which amount Virginia solemnly dedicated to the satisfaction pro rata of the one-third for which the bonds were held in trust by her. This provision in the seventh section of the act was designed to preclude the idea that these certificates created a new and distinct liability of Virginia. The previous language of the seventh section is—

> "The owners of all classes of bonds mentioned in this act, and who shall not yet have received certificates representing the remaining one-third of their principal and interest, due and payable by the State of West Virginia, shall receive certificates of a like character to those issued under the act of March 30, 1871, when they make such exchange," &c.

We have seen that the certificates issued under the act of March 30, 1871, declared on their face (Record, p. 72) that "the State of Virginia holds said bond so far as unfunded in trust for the holder thereof or his assignees, and these certificates, issued under this act of 1879, were to be of "like character." It is manifest, then, that under the act of 1879 there was no release by the bondholders of the liability of Virginia on the bonds surrendered to Virginia and held by her in trust for the holder as to the one-third.

(3) That under the act of February 14, 1882, entitled "An act to ascertain and declare Virginia's equitable share of the debt created before and actually existing at the time of the partition of her territory and resources, and to provide for the issuance of bonds covering the same, and the regular and prompt payment of interest thereon" (Record, p. 21 et seq.), Virginia obtained a release of liability from the bondholders.

This was the act passed by the repudiating legislature, under the malign influence of the Mahone-Riddleburger reactionaries. This act was the fruitful source of all the litigation that so long disturbed the patience of this court, from Hartman vs. Greenhow, 102 U. S., 877, down through many years. By section 6 of this act (Record, p. 28) the form of a certificate was prescribed, which recites that "Virginia has this day discharged her equitable share of the — bond, * * * leaving a balance of — dollars * * * to be accounted for by the State of West Virginia, without recourse upon this Commonwealth."

Now this certificate does not even purport to be a contract on the part of the bondholder, nor does the act itself purport to alter, amend, or repeal the former acts. It was a mischievous attempt, conceived in wicked folly and wrought out in ignorance, to repudiate the public debt. It could operate only prospectively, and but few of the bonds remained at the date of its enactment on which it could operate. Whatever its purpose and intent were, it could have no sort of effect on the relations then existing between Virginia and West Virginia nor between Virginia and those of her creditors who had already surrendered their bonds and received the certificates.

That by the act of February 20, 1892, entitled "An act to provide for the settlement of the public debt of Virginia not funded under the provisions of" [the preceding act], (Record, p. 31), Virginia was released. This was the first of a series of acts looking to the employment of a commission or committee as an instrumentality through which an arrangement might be made with all the holders of the bonds of every description issued by Virginia, whether funded or unfunded, under which all such bonds and the certificates issued in connection therewith might be assembled and united action taken by them with and through Virginia to obtain a final settlement of West Virginia's liability for her share of the public debt, the recovery of the amount of such liability, and the payment thereof to Virginia and the distribution by Virginia of such amount among the persons entitled thereto.

This was followed by the act of March 6, 1894 (Record, p. 39), and the act of March 6, 1900 (Record, p. 41).

On page 43 of the record appears the "Report of the commission appointed and acting under the joint resolution of the General Assembly of Virginia approved March 6, 1894, and the act of the said General Assembly approved March 6, 1900, with respect to certain certificates issued by the State in connection with the debt of the original State of Virginia, and known as Virginia deferred certificates."

This report is contained between pages 42 and 82 of the record. It shows all that was done by the Virginia Debt Commission and the bondholders' committee in obtaining concurrent action on the part of the creditors; it shows the scrupulous and intelligent care taken by the General Assembly of Virginia in requiring that a large majority of such creditors should unite in their demands before the Commonwealth would take decided action; it required that an open, public, formal, and earnest request should be made upon West Virginia to come into a friendly settlement of these matters before any resort should be had to the courts for redress; it shows the extreme care taken by the Attorney General of Virginia to see that he was invested with full authority, and that all the conditions precedent to its exercise had been fully performed before he would institute the proceedings provided for in the acts; it shows, too, the address made by the Virginia Debt Commission to the legislature through their spokesman, Mr. Randolph Harrison (Record, p. 66), in which are the full history of the debt, the legislation had thereon, the repeated efforts made by Virginia to induce West Virginia to come into a friendly settlement, the sanction of law on which Virginia relied to support her demand, and the unpleasant consequences that must ensue in the event of West Virginia's persistent refusal to make a settlement.

The address was received with respectful silence, and it is of consequence to note that although it was heard by the assembled body of the legislative committees of West Virginia's intelligent legislature, that not then, or at any time since, as at no time in the long period that had passed, was any intimation given, or ground of refusal to the invitation urged, that West Virginia would not enter upon the proposed settlement because a COMPACT had been entered into between the two States, and which still subsisted, by which that very legislature had been chosen as the final arbitrator of the very matter as to which Virginia was asking a settlement.

IN EQUITY.

COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA, ...COMPLAINANT.

VS.

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA, ...DEFENDANT.

BRIEF FOR VIRGINIA, UPON MOTION TO ENTER DECREE REFERRING THE CAUSE TO A MASTER.

Drafts of a decree referring the cause to a Master have been submitted on behalf of the complainant, and the defendant, respectively.

[I]

There are some differences going rather to matters of procedure than to any question of principle, between the provisions of paragraphs III. and IV. of complainant's draft, as compared with paragraph VII. of defendant's draft, which will be apparent upon reading the two papers.

We respectfully ask that the provisions expressed in paragraphs III., IV. and V. of complainant's draft be embodied in the decree which the court shall enter, for reasons which will be apparent on reading those paragraphs.

[II]

Our serious objections to the defendant's draft of decree are particularly to paragraph II., but also to paragraphs III., IV. and V. thereof.

The draft submitted on behalf of the complainant directs the master to take an account ascertaining:

I.

"The amount of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia as of the first day of January, 1861, stating specifically, how and in what form the same was evidenced, by what authority of law and for what purposes the same was created, and the dates and nature of the bonds or other evidences of said indebtedness."

The defendant's draft adopts this paragraph.

Paragraph II. of plaintiff's draft directs the master to take the following accounts:

II.

"What amount and proportion of said indebtedness and of the interest accrued thereon, should in equity be apportioned to and be now paid by the State of West Virginia."

Paragraph II. of [redacted] draft directs the master to take the following accounts:

II.

(a) "The amount of State expenditures made by the Commonwealth of Virginia prior to the first day of January, 1861, within the territory now included within the State of West Virginia since any part of said indebtedness was contracted, as provided by the ordinance adopted by the Commonwealth of Virginia at Wheeling, August 20th, 1861.

(b) "The aggregate ordinary expenses of the State government of the Commonwealth of Virginia, prior to January 1st, 1861, and since any part of said indebtedness was contracted.

(c) "All moneys paid into the treasury of the Commonwealth of Virginia from the counties included within the State of West Virginia during said period."

Paragraph III. of plaintiff's draft directs that the master,

III.

"will make and return with his report any special or alternative statements of the accounts between the complainant and the defendant in the premises which either may desire him to state or which he may deem to be desirable to present to the court."

We respectfully object to paragraph II. of defendant's draft, on the ground that it seems to lend the sanction of the court in advance to a basis or scheme for the statement of the account, which is not shown by anything as yet in the cause to be either equitable or just.

Before any such question can be fairly adjudicated, it is necessary to the ends of justice, that there shall be a mass of evidence in the case, not yet introduced, which evidence the court should have the aid of its master in collating and thoroughly digesting.

There is by no means enough in the record to enable the court to come to any just or definite conclusion as to the precise scheme which it would be equitable to adopt in stating the account.

To do so at this stage of the litigation, would be to decide an important question in the case before the evidence necessary for a full understanding and just decision of that question is before the court. It would be largely to take a step in the dark, which might, and in all probability would, do injustice to one party or the other.

Our main objection to paragraph II. of defendant's draft is that its effect manifestly is to have the court prejudge the case as to the basis on which the account shall be stated.

On the other hand, in the draft of decree tendered by counsel for Virginia, we have not asked the court to prejudge the case upon any controverted question of law or fact.

The case is not now being submitted for a decision upon its merits.

It is submitted for a decree referring it to a master, to state and report to the court the data necessary to enable the court to justly decide it upon its merits—and all the complainant desires is an opportunity to show the court and its master what is the fair and equitable basis upon which the account between the two States should be stated, under all of the circumstances of the case, as they shall appear when the evidence is all in.

If it should then appear that the basis prescribed by the Wheeling ordinance is binding upon the parties, and must be followed as the basis upon which the account shall be made up, that basis would be adopted. But if it should be then manifest that that arbitrary basis of settlement is not the one on which the account should be stated, because it would, if applied to the facts of the case as they shall appear in the evidence, lead to absolutely unconscionable results and operate to impair the obligation of the contracts by which the common debt was created, contracts which were and are alike obligatory upon Virginia and upon West Virginia, or for any other valid reason, then the scheme of settlement indicated in the Wheeling ordinance would have to be discarded, and an equitable basis and scheme of settlement adopted.

It is due to frankness to say, that, while the Wheeling ordinance upon its face, prescribes an absolutely arbitrary basis of settlement, the representatives of Virginia are satisfied that upon a fair, reasonable and just construction of the language of that ordinance, and of the subsequent supplemental enactments, the scheme of settlement therein defined will, when applied to the facts as stated in the bill, and as it is believed they can be established by proofs, result in fixing the proportion of the debt of Virginia which West Virginia should assume and pay, inclusive of interest, at a very large sum, though not so large a sum as it would be equitable for West Virginia to pay.

The debt, a portion of which she was to pay, was an interest-bearing debt. It would be manifestly "just" and "equitable" that West Virginia should be required to pay interest as well as principal. Indeed, any settlement which does not require that State to pay interest during the long period of her default and refusal to pay anything, would be not only unjust, and inequitable, but iniquitous.

The ninth section of said ordinance required the new State "to take upon itself a just proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia prior to January 1, 1861."

And section 8 of Article VIII., of the first Constitution of West Virginia, under the provisions of which she became a State, required that:

> "8. An equitable proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia prior to the first day of January, 1861, shall be assumed by this State;" and that "the Legislature shall ascertain the same as soon as may be practicable and provide for the liquidation thereof by a sinking fund sufficient to pay the accruing interest and redeem the principal within thirty-four years."

So, West Virginia came into the Union upon the distinct condition expressed in her Constitution, that she would assume an equitable proportion of the common debt of the undivided State, as it existed prior to January 1, 1861, and would provide for the payment of the accruing interest and the redemption of the principal thereof.

While it is believed that, upon the facts stated in the Bill and accompanying exhibits, and upon the proofs hereafter to be adduced in support thereof, West Virginia will owe a very large sum, even under the arbitrary scheme of the Wheeling ordinance, we submit that we should not, in the present status of the litigation, be tied down to the terms of that ordinance.

Indeed, its provisions were modified by the terms of the eighth section of Article VIII of the Constitution under which West Virginia was made a State, which provided that West Virginia should assume an equitable proportion of the common debt of the Commonwealth, principal and interest: And yet the defendant's draft excludes any item of interest from the account.

[III]

Another palpable objection to the defendant's draft is, that it excludes from the account the value of the property, assets, and money which West Virginia has received from the Commonwealth.

Upon any basis of just accounting, these items should be brought into the account.

If the account should be stated on the basis of the Wheeling ordinance, these items would manifestly be proper charges against West Virginia.

By the terms of that ordinance, Virginia's title to, and ownership of, all of the property and assets theretofore belonging to the Commonwealth remain intact.

By it, West Virginia would acquire no title to any of those assets or of that property. Framed as that ordinance was, by western Virginians, and arbitrary, and on its face unjust, as were the criteria by which it undertook to provide that West Virginia's proportion of the common debt should be computed, its authors were not so conscienceless as to also propose that the new State, after making such an inadequate contribution to its share of a debt which had been chiefly contracted by the votes of the representatives of its people and for their benefit, should also have a share of the property and assets of the Commonwealth, free of charge.

All that was, by the terms of that ordinance, to be ceded by the Commonwealth to the new State, was political dominion, and jurisdiction over the people and territory embraced in the new State.

The meaning and effect of the ordinance was to leave the title to, and ownership of, the assets and property of the Commonwealth in the Commonwealth.

If nothing more had been done or said by Virginia as to that property and those assets, than was said in the Wheeling ordinance, none of it ever would have become the property of West Virginia.

The Virginians who were the creators of West Virginia, who sat in the Wheeling Convention on the 20th of August, 1861, who constituted the convention which framed the first Constitution of West Virginia, and who constituted the Legislature of the restored government of Virginia which sat in Wheeling in 1862, and in 1863, fully recognized this to be true, for, pending the formation of the new State, and before the Legislature of Virginia had in any form given its consent to its creation out of the territory of Virginia, the Legislature of the restored State of Virginia, whose authority was supreme over the territory and people afterwards constituting West Virginia, and binding upon them, on the 3rd and 4th of February, 1863, passed the acts copied in the appendix to this brief.

These statutes constituted a part of the enactments out of which the State of West Virginia had its birth. It is particularly true of the act of February 3, 1863, that it was fundamental, so far as West Virginia was concerned: for it constitutes her title deed to a vast quantity of property, the title to which, by law and under the Wheeling ordinance, was vested in Virginia.

These statutes, together with the Wheeling ordinance, the first Constitution of West Virginia, the act of the United States Congress approved December 31, 1862, under which the new State was afterwards admitted into the Union, and the act of the Wheeling Legislature of May 13, 1862, constitute the constating instruments and acts by which her political existence was created, and her governmental powers and duties determined.

As was indicated by this court in its decision overruling the defendant's demurrer, the Wheeling ordinance, and Section 8 of Article VIII of the first Constitution of West Virginia, must be taken and read together: So also these constating acts of February 3rd and 4th, 1863, and particularly of February 3rd, 1863, must be taken and read together with Section 9 of the Wheeling ordinance, and with Section 8 of Article VIII of the first West Virginia Constitution, as together prescribing the terms and conditions on which the consent of the Commonwealth was given to the formation of the new State out of her territory, and the transfer to that new State when formed of any portion of the assets and property of the parent State.

Property and money large in quantity and value were thereupon transferred by Virginia to West Virginia, for all of which West Virginia must account, not only as an equitable obligation resting upon her, under the circumstances, but as a legal obligation put upon her by positive and binding enactment.

All of these just items of charge against West Virginia, are excluded from the account to be directed by the court by the terms of defendant's draft.

For convenience of reference, the "Wheeling Ordinance," and the acts of the Legislature of Virginia at Wheeling, passed February 3rd and 4th, 1863, are printed as an appendix to this brief.

[IV.]

Another objection to the account called for by defendant's draft, is that it does not direct any account to be taken ascertaining the amount and proportion of the debt of Virginia on and prior to January 1, 1861, which West Virginia should assume and pay, but contents itself with merely directing the arbitrary and inconsequential accounts defined in paragraph II of defendant's draft.

But our principal insistance is that defendant's draft of a decree prejudges the case in advance of a hearing upon the merits, while that tendered for the plaintiff cannot operate to the prejudice of either party, upon any material question in the cause; by this draft the adjudication of these questions being left to await a hearing after the Master's report shall be filed, upon the evidence then fully in the cause.

[V.]

The precise accounts called for by paragraph II of defendant's draft will be taken by the Master if he shall find it necessary and proper to take them in order to ascertain the amount and proportion of the Virginia debt which West Virginia should pay; and if the Master shall for any reason deem it unnecessary to take those accounts, the defendant can, under paragraph III of complainant's draft, have them stated as special accounts, if she shall be so advised.

Paragraph III of complainant's draft is designed to enable each party, or the Master, to have alternative, or special statements of the accounts made up on any basis on which either party or the Master may deem it proper or desirable that the same shall be stated.

By having the respective views and contentions of the complainant and the defendant thus presented in contrast in such concrete form, the court, with the assistance of the findings of the Master, will be enabled more readily and intelligently to reach a just conclusion.

[VI.]

If the inquiries defined in paragraphs III., IV., V. and VI. of defendant's draft have any pertinency to any question in the case, it must be because of something not yet in the record.

We object to them as being unnecessary and irrelevant.

(a) There is nothing in the cause, or so far as we know out of it, to show that there is any foundation in fact for the inquiry mentioned in paragraph III. of defendant's draft, as to whether Virginia has made any other contracts or arrangements with the public creditors, since January 1, 1861, in reference to the public debt. So that inquiry, though harmless, is useless.

(b) The accounts provided for in paragraphs IV. and V. of defendant's draft, are not pertinent to any issue in the cause.

Both relate to the certificates or receipts given by Virginia to the holders of the bonds issued by the Commonwealth before her dismemberment, who have deposited these bonds with her.

Those certificates are in the nature of a declaration of trust by Virginia, that she holds said bonds (so far as they have not been funded in the new securities which the Commonwealth has given for about two-thirds of the aggregate amount thereof, principal and interest), for the benefit of the owners of the bonds deposited with her.

It is impossible to see how those transactions could in any way affect any question which will arise in this cause.

The only function of those certificates is to show who are now entitled to the bonds which were so deposited with Virginia, and which she holds in her treasury for the benefit of these certificate holders, awaiting a settlement with West Virginia.

As is true of the inquiries mentioned in paragraph III., of defendant's draft, the objection to those provided for by paragraphs IV. and V. are that they are unnecessary and useless.

(c) The same objection applies to paragraph VI. of defendant's draft. That relates to the obligations which were issued by Virginia, as now constituted, in settlement of the two-thirds of the old bonds funded, and payment of which was assumed by her.

That is a matter with which West Virginia has nothing to do, and which does not affect the rights or obligations of either party in respect to the claims asserted in complainant's Bill.

Those new bonds given by Virginia for the two-thirds of the old bonds assumed by her, and accepted by the owners of the old bonds so deposited with Virginia, operated as a payment and discharge of the old bonds to the extent of the two-thirds thereof so funded.

West Virginia is not sued here to pay any part of that two-thirds so settled by Virginia. She is sued to have her assume and pay so much of the remaining unfunded third of the common debt of the undivided State, as may be West Virginia's equitable portion of the whole of the debt represented by the bonds of the original State. It has never been claimed or suggested that there was any liability on West Virginia beyond said unfunded third of the bonds of the original State which have been funded; or that West Virginia should pay more than one-third of the bonds issued by Virginia prior to the formation of West Virginia, which have not been funded.

The liability of West Virginia on account of the common public debt, has sometimes been estimated by Virginia or her representatives at one-third thereof, but never at more than one-third, and Virginia has undertaken to take care of the other two-thirds with which West Virginia has nothing to do.

It is true, that there are some millions of the debt of the undivided State, which Virginia has paid in full, and holds the obligations so taken up by her as a claim against the new State, to the extent of West Virginia's equitable liability for contribution therefor; and the extent of that liability can be ascertained and stated in the account directed by paragraph II. of complainant's draft.

There is no occasion for any of the accounts directed by paragraphs III., IV., V. and VI. of defendant's draft. If West Virginia wants any of them to be stated, she can have that done as a special statement under paragraph III. of complainaint's draft.

[VII.]

We object generally to the defendant's draft, that it does not direct the accounts which are necessary to be taken in order to intelligently, definitely, and fairly determine the amount and proportion of the debt of the undivided State, which West Virginia is equitably and justly bound to pay.

Respectfully submitted,

WILLIAM A. ANDERSON,

COUNSEL FOR VIRGINIA.

APPENDIX.

Copy of the ordinance adopted by "the Wheeling Convention," providing for the formation of the new State afterwards called West Virginia.

AN ORDINANCE.

To provide for the formation of a new State out of a portion of the territory of this State.

(Passed August 20, 1861.)

Whereas, it is represented to be the desire of the people inhabiting the counties hereinafter mentioned, to be separated from this Commonwealth, and to be erected into a separate State, and admitted into the Union of States, and become a member of the government of the United States:

1. The people of Virginia, by their delegates assembled in convention at Wheeling, do ordain that a new State, to be called the State of Kanawha, be formed and erected out of the territory included within the following described boundary: beginning on the Tug Fork of Sandy river, on the Kentucky line where the counties of Buchanan and Logan join the same; and running thence with the dividing lines of said counties and the dividing line of the counties of Wyoming and McDowell to the Mercer county line, and with the dividing line of the counties of Mercer and Wyoming to the Raleigh county line; thence with the dividing line of the counties of Raleigh and Mercer, Monroe and Raleigh, Greenbrier and Raleigh, Fayette and Greenbrier, Nicholas and Greenbrier, Webster, Greenbrier and Pocahontas, Randolph and Pocahontas, Randolph and Pendleton, to the southwest corner of Hardy county; thence with the dividing line of the counties of Hardy and Tucker, to the Fairfax Stone; thence with the line dividing the States of Maryland and Virginia, to the Pennsylvania line; thence with the line dividing the States of Pennsylvania and Virginia, to the Ohio river; thence down said river, and including the same, to the dividing line between Virginia and Kentucky, and with the said line to the beginning; including within the boundaries of the proposed new State the counties of Logan, Wyoming, Raleigh, Fayette, Nicholas, Webster, Randolph, Tucker, Preston, Monongalia, Marion, Taylor, Barbour, Upshur, Harrison, Lewis, Braxton, Clay, Kanawha, Boone, Wayne, Cabell, Putnam, Mason, Jackson, Roane, Calhoun, Wirt, Gilmer, Ritchie, Wood, Pleasants, Tyler, Doddridge, Wetzel, Marshall, Ohio, Brooke, and Hancock.

2. All persons qualified to vote within the boundaries aforesaid, and who shall present themselves at the several places of voting within their respective counties, on the fourth Thursday in October next, shall be allowed to vote on the question of the formation of a new State, as hereinbefore proposed; and it shall be the duty of the commissioners conducting the election at the said several places of voting, at the same time, to cause polls to be taken for the election of delegates to a convention to form a Constitution for the government of the proposed State.

3. The convention hereinbefore provided for may change the boundaries described in the first section of this ordinance, so as to include within the proposed State the counties of Greenbrier and Pocahontas, or either of them, and also the counties of Hampshire, Hardy, Morgan, Berkeley and Jefferson, or either of them, and also such other counties as lie contiguous to the said boundaries, or to the counties named in this section; if the said counties to be added, or either of them, by a majority of the votes given, shall declare their wish to form part of the proposed State, and shall elect delegates to the said convention, at elections to be held at the time and in the manner herein provided for.

4. Poll books shall be prepared under the direction of the governor for each place of voting in the several counties hereinbefore mentioned, with two separate columns, one to be headed "For the New State," the other "Against the New State."

And it shall be the duty of the commissioners who superintended, and the officers who conducted the election in May last, or such other persons as the governor may appoint, to attend at their respective places of holding elections, and superintend and conduct the election herein provided for. And if the said commissioners and officers shall fail to attend at any such place of holding elections, it shall be lawful for any two freeholders present to act as commissioners in superintending the said election, and to appoint officers to conduct the same. It shall be the duty of the persons superintending and conducting said election, to employ clerks to record the votes, and to endorse on the respective poll books the expenses of the same.

If on the day herein provided for holding said election, there shall be in any of the said counties any military force, or any hostile assemblage of persons, so as to interfere with a full and free expression of the will of the voters, they may assemble at any other place within their county, and hold an election as herein provided for. It shall be the duty of the commissioners superintending, and officers conducting said election, and the clerks employed to record the votes, each before entering upon the duties of his office, to take, in addition to the oath now required by the general election law, the oath of office prescribed by this convention. It shall be the duty of the officers and commissioners aforesaid, as soon as may be, and not exceeding three days after said election, to aggregate each of the columns of said poll books, and ascertain the number of votes recorded in each, and make a return thereof to the Secretary of the Commonwealth, in the city of Wheeling, which return shall be in the following form, or to the following effect:

We, ... commissioners, and ..... conducting officer, do certify, that we caused an election to be held at ....., in the county of ....., at which we permited all persons to vote that were entitled to do so under existing laws, and that offered to vote, and that we have carefully added up each column of our poll books, and find the following results:

For a new State, ... votes; Against a new State, ... votes.

Given under my hand, this ..... day of ....., 1861.

Under which certificate there shall be added the following affidavit:

..... County, to-Wit:

I, ..., a justice of the peace, (or any officer now authorized by law to administer oaths,) in and for said county, do certify that the above named commissioners and conducting officer severally made oath before me, that the certificate by them above signed is true.

Given under our hand, this ..... day of ....., 1861.

The original poll books shall be carefully kept by the conducting officers for ninety days after the day of election and upon the demand of the executive shall be delivered to such person as he may authorize to demand and receive them.

5. The commissioners conducting the said election in each of said counties shall ascertain, at the same time they ascertain the vote upon the formation of a new State, who has been elected from their county to the convention, hereinbefore provided for, and shall certify to the Secretary of the Commonwealth the name or names of the person or persons elected to the said convention.

6. It shall be the duty of the governor, on or before the fifteenth day of November next, to ascertain and by proclamation make known the result of the said vote; and if a majority of the votes given within the boundaries mentioned in the first section of this ordinance, shall be in favor of the formation of a new State, he shall so state in his said proclamation, and shall call upon said delegates to meet in the city of Wheeling, on the 26th day of November next, and organize themselves into a convention; and the said convention shall submit, for ratification or rejection, the Constitution that may be agreed upon by it, to the qualified voters within the proposed State, to be voted upon by the said voters on the fourth Thursday in December next.

7. The county of Ohio shall elect three delegates; the counties of Harrison, Kanawha, Marion, Marshall, Monongalia, Preston, and Wood shall each elect two; and the other counties named in the first section of this ordinance shall each elect one delegate to the said convention. And such other counties as are described in the third section of this ordinance, shall, for every thousand of their population according to the census of 1860, be entitled to one delegate, and to an additional delegate for any fraction over thirty-five hundred; but each of said counties shall be entitled to at least one delegate. The said delegate shall receive the same per diem as is now allowed to members of the general assembly; but no person shall receive pay as a member of the general assembly and of the convention at the same time.

8. It shall be the duty of the governor to lay before the general assembly, at its next meeting, for their consent according to the constitution of the United States, the result of the said vote, if it shall be found that a majority of the votes cast be in favor of a new State, and also in favor of the constitution proposed to said voters for their adoption.

9. The new state shall take upon itself a just proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia prior to the first day of January, 1861, to be ascertained by charging to it all state expenditures within the limits thereof, and a just proportion of the ordinary expenses of the state government, since any part of said debt was contracted; and deducting therefrom the moneys paid into the treasury of the commonwealth from the counties included within the said new state during the same period. All private rights and interests in lands within the proposed State, derived from the laws of Virginia prior to such separation, shall remain valid and secure under the laws of the proposed State, and shall be determined by the laws now existing in the State of Virginia.

The lands within the proposed State, of non-resident proprietors shall not in any case be taxed higher than the lands of residents therein. No grants of lands or land warrants issued by the proposed State, shall interfere with any warrant issued from the land office of Virginia prior to the 17th day of April last, which shall be located on lands within the proposed State now liable thereto.

10. When the general assembly shall give its consent to the formation of such new State, it shall forward to the Congress of the United States such consent, together with an official copy of such constitution, with the request that the said new State may be admitted into the union of States.

11. The government of the State of Virginia as re-organized by this convention at its session in June last, shall retain, within the territory of the proposed State, undiminished and unimpaired, all the powers and authority with which its has been vested, until the proposed State shall be admitted into the Union by the Congress of the United States; and nothing in this ordinance contained, or which shall be done in pursuance thereof, shall impair or affect the authority of the said re-organized State government in any county which shall not be included within the proposed State.

IN EQUITY. ORIGINAL, NO. 4.

vs.

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA, Defendant.

REPLY BRIEF FOR VIRGINIA UPON MOTION TO REFER THE CAUSE TO A MASTER.

The propositions contended for by the counsel for West Virginia in their elaborate brief upon the above motion will be here reviewed, though not in the order in which they are presented.

AS TO ORDER OF PROCEDURE.

While this court in Rhode Island v. Massachusetts, 14 Peters, 210, 257, considered it proper that the proceedings in that case should "be regulated by the rules and uses" of the English Court of Chancery, it declared that:

> "in a controversy where two sovereign States are contesting the boundary between them, it will be the duty of the court to mould the rules of chancery practice and pleading in such a manner as to bring this case to a final hearing on its real merits. It is too important in its character, and the interests concerned are too great, to be decided upon the mere technical principles of chancery pleading." 14 Peters, 257.

It will not be gainsaid that this language applies with added force to this case.

The only rule of chancery practice adopted by this court, is in accordance with this just conception of its powers and duties, and is as follows:

> "Rule 3. This court considers the former practice of the courts of King's bench and of chancery, in England, as affording outlines for the practice of this court; and will, from time to time, make such alterations therein as circumstances may render necessary."

Neither the technical rules of practice obtaining in the circuit courts of the United States; nor those approved by Mr. Bates and other learned text-writers; nor those sanctioned by any other tribunal whatever will control this court in the matter of the procedure and processes which it may deem necessary and proper to adopt, in order to attain the ends of justice.

This results from the very nature of its powers and duties in a case like this, as to which its jurisdiction is not only exclusive, but final, plenary and absolute.

In this its only rule upon the subject, the court has indicated the former practice of the courts of chancery in England as "affording outlines" for the practice of this court in chancery causes.

If we look to the practice of the English courts in chancery, and to the chancery practice sanctioned by the courts and jurists of this country, precedents and authorities will be examined in vain to find any sanction for the proposition that each of the six rules laid down by Mr. Bates in the section quoted in the brief for West Virginia, must be complied with before there can be a decree for an account in a case like this; nor are we willing to believe that the learned counsel for the defendant would carry their contention to any such extremity.

Adam's Equity (8th Ed.) Book III, Chapter 1, M. pp. 220 to 222-226;

1 Story's Eq. Jurisprudence (13th Ed.) Chapter VIII. Titles, Account, Apportionment, and Partnership, Sections 450, 469 to 477-483-488-671.

The general rule is that a decree for accounts, or order of reference is from its nature interlocutory, because it directs an inquiry and contemplates the bringing of new and additional facts into the record. It would be practically impossible to state in advance all the principles of law which might apply to the facts as they might thereafter be developed. As if an account of debts were ordered against a partnership, corporation, or estate, it would be impracticable to state in advance what rules of law should obtain in regard to the establishment of such debts; as for instance, what might be valid defences, such as failure, or want of consideration, the statute of limitations, payment, set-off, &c., any of which might be interposed against the different debts as presented, and no one could say in advance to what extent they might be applicable or valid.

"A decree is understood to be interlocutory whenever an inquiry as to a matter of law or fact is directed preparatory to a final decision." Bebee v. Russel, 19th How., 285, and in the same case we find the following citation from the 2nd volume of Perkin's Daniel's Chancery Practice 1193, "that the most usual ground for not making a perfect decree in the first instance, is the necessity which frequently exists for a reference to a master of the court, to make inquiries, or take accounts, or sell estates and adjust other matters which are necessary to be disposed of, before a complete decision can be come to upon the subject matter of the suit," p. 285.

The primary purpose of this suit is to invoke the equitable jurisdiction of "Account"; to have the account between the parties, involving more or less complicated transactions, made up of a vast number of items running through a period of more than seventy years, stated, in order to obtain from the defendant the amount for which she shall be thus ascertained to be equitably liable.

The principal facts upon which the complainant's claim depends, namely; the formation of the new State out of the territory of the Commonwealth of Virginia; the existence of a public debt of the undivided State of some $33,000,000.00 at and before that event, a large part of which remains an unsatisfied and binding obligation upon both States; the ordinances, public acts, and fundamental stipulations and enactments by which West Virginia assumed, and became liable for an equitable proportion of that common indebtedness,—all of these and other material facts are alleged in the bill, and are, either not controverted by the defendant's answer, or are established by the documents and public records filed with the bill, or are a part of the history of the two States, and of the times, and of the country.

The facts which justify the complainant in instituting her suit for an accounting, and for a decree thereupon, are thus sufficiently established to entitle her to a decree to that end. Indeed, we had supposed that the decree of this court overruling the defendant's demurrer, had pretty well settled this.

If precise proof of Virginia's claim should be required to be made, before a decree for an accounting would be entered, it would be necessary for the court to devote months of its time to the examination of the books, accounts, documents, and transactions of the Commonwealth, in connection with the creation of the debt, the expenditures made in the counties now constituting West Virginia, and the payments made from those counties into the treasury of Virginia, during a period of forty years or more, and also to the examination of the records of both States in reference to the lands and other property which West Virginia received from Virginia.

It is difficult to conceive how a stronger case could be presented for the exercise of the equitable jurisdiction of "Account," "in order to bring the case to a final hearing upon the merits."

But while the case is not in a condition for the court to intelligently and fairly "pass upon all the issues made in the pleadings," it is in condition for a decree of reference, in which decree the principles upon which the account shall be stated should be settled, so far as it is practicable to do that from the data now in the record, and without doing injustice to either party.

In the draft of decree tendered on the 7th of last December by counsel for the complainant, some important questions were left open which we are prepared now on further consideration to say, it would be as well, or better, to have settled in advance.

To this extent we concur, upon this point, in the views presented by the learned counsel for West Virginia.

While the basis of settlement prescribed by the Wheeling Ordinance is, as we have always considered it, arbitrary and inequitable, we have never taken the position that that Ordinance, reasonably and fairly construed, and taken and applied together with the Act of the Restored Government of Virginia of February 3, 1863, and section 8 of Article VIII of the Constitution under which West Virginia became a State, was not binding on both States.

While thus construed and applied, the amount and proportion of the public debt assignable to West Virginia will doubtless be much less than it would have been equitable for her to have assumed and paid, we are constrained to the opinion that the plan of settlement prescribed and sanctioned by the foregoing enactments is binding upon Virginia.

It is due to candor also, to say that, although it is true that the Convention which enacted the Wheeling Ordinance, was not called, constituted, or organized in accordance with the requirements of the Constitution and laws of Virginia, and was a revolutionary body; although it could then have been shown that that Convention and its acts were invalid, and may now be contended that the Convention and the Wheeling Ordinance which it adopted, were fictions, nevertheless, they and their offspring, the Restored Government of Virginia, and the State of West Virginia, have since received such recognition and sanction from every department of the United States Government, and from the Government of Virginia also, that, what, in its inception, was a fiction, has become a legal fiction, and now has all of the force, if not all of the virtue, of a legal verity.

We are constrained to recognize the following propositions as true:

(a) That the State of West Virginia could have no legal birth or existence without the consent of the Legislature of Virginia.

(b) That the only Legislature of Virginia which ever gave its consent to the formation of West Virginia, was the Legislature of the Restored Government which, sitting at Wheeling on the 13th of May, 1862, gave its consent to the formation of the new State, "according to the boundaries and under the provisions set forth in the Constitution for the said State of West Virginia, and the schedule thereto annexed, proposed by the Convention which assembled at Wheeling on the 26th of November, 1861."*

(c) That the Act giving such consent and the Legislature which passed it, depended for their validity upon the validity of the Wheeling Ordinance under which the Restored Government of Virginia was organized.

(d) That said Convention, and its acts, and the Government which it established, have been legitimated, by recognition by every department of the Government,--by the President of the United States in his official intercourse and dealings with the Governor and officials of said Restored Government, by approving the bill for the admission of West Virginia, and by his proclamation announcing the admission of the new State into the Union; by the Congress of the United States in the admission of Senators Willey and Carlisle elected by the Legislature of the Restored Government, by the passage of the Act approved December 31, 1862, admitting West Virginia into

*At the time of the argument upon the demurrer, counsel for complainant were under the impression that this Legislature had not been convened pursuant to the proclamation of the Governor, without which proclamation the meeting of the Legislature would have been, under the then Constitution of Virginia, invalid; but subsequently the Executive Journal of the Governor of Virginia at Wheeling, for 1862, was found, and it appears from it that Governor Pierpont issued a proclamation under which the special session of the Legislature in May, 1862, was held.

the Union, and by other acts; and by the United States Supreme Court, by its decision in Virginia v. West Virginia, 11 Wallace, p. 39, in which the Wheeling Convention and this very Wheeling Ordinance and the Wheeling Legislature of Virginia, are recognized as being a Convention, an Ordinance, and a Legislature of the Commonwealth of Virginia.

We are forced by these considerations to conclude that it too late now to question the binding effect of the Wheeling Ordinance.

Still, it cannot be forgotten that there was not a man in the Virginia, and West Virginia, Wheeling Conventions of 1861-2, and 3, from any of the counties or cities which now constitute Virginia, except the four men admitted to seats in the Virginia Convention at Wheeling, of August, 1861, two of them from Alexandria and two from Fairfax county, both parts of the present State of Virginia; that there was no pretence that there was any representation whatever in said Conventions, or in the Legislature of the Restored Government of Virginia, from more than two-thirds of the territory and people of Virginia; and that, in a number of instances, the very same men acted as the representatives both of the people of Virginia, and of the people of West Virginia, in said Conventions and Legislatures.

The indisputable facts are, that it was the people of the counties and cities now constituting West Virginia, or their representatives, who were dealing with the people of the same counties and cities, or their representatives, and undertaking to make covenants and stipulations with themselves which would bind all the people, and the entire Commonwealth of Virginia, in matters of the utmost importance to them.

Among other instances of manifest injustice in the plan prescribed in the Ordinance, is, that it operates to exclude from the account all items of expenditure in the early years of the last century.

If the principle adopted by that Ordinance was just, why should its application be stopped in 1820?

For a number of years before that date there had been large expenditures made by Virginia in what is now West Virginia, towards which the people of that section had contributed little or nothing. For a long period after the settlement of Western Virginia, the rest of the State had practically to carry that section of the Commonwealth.

Many times as much was expended there on public account, as it contributed to the Treasury of the Commonwealth.

All that was well enough, for it was reasonably hoped that in time, with the development of the bountiful resources of that trans-mountain region and the consequent increase of its wealth, the accounts would be squared.

From the very dawn of the internal improvement policy of Virginia the dream of her leading men was the construction of some efficient line of communication between her Eastern and her Western waters.

This was earnestly advocated by Washington, and others of her representative citizens, and among these Chief Justice Marshall applied the great powers of his mind and unerring judgment in aid of a wise solution of the problem.

In 1812, at the request of the General Assembly, he devoted much of his time to arduous service as Chairman of a Commission which was created for the purpose of examining the intervening region, and ascertaining and reporting as to the best route and mode of communication between the Eastern and Western waters.

Together with other members of the Commission, the Chief Justice spent some time among the mountains and wild woods of Western Virginia, much of it then almost a trackless wilderness, in the patriotic discharge of this voluntarily accepted duty.

The report of this Commission which was evidently written by the Great Chief Justice, will be filed as an exhibit in the cause, not only as indicating the purpose and desire of Virginia at that early day to open up a highway through West Virginia, but as an interesting fact in connection with the history of the internal improvement policy of Virginia.

From 1812 down to the breaking out of the war which resulted in her dismemberment, the means and energies of the Commonwealth were largely devoted to the construction of roads, turnpikes, water-ways, and railroads, and especially to lines which were designed to develop Western Virginia.

This policy generally received the earnest support of the people of what now constitutes West Virginia, and their representatives, and very little indeed of the debt would have been contracted if they had opposed it; for there was a powerful opposition to that policy and to contracting the debt in large portions of the Eastern part of the State.

As giving some notion of the views of leading and representative citizens of Western Virginia, extracts from the message to the General Assembly, of Governor Joseph Johnson, of Harrison county, West Virginia, in January, 1852, will be printed in the appendix to this brief.

These are incontrovertible facts, to which we cannot shut our eyes, unless we would ignore the truth.

We therefore respectfully submit that these ordinances and public acts, adopted under such circumstances, should not be construed strictly against Virginia, who, without the actual consent of her people, or their representatives, was to be bound by them.

On the contrary, they should be strictly construed against West Virginia, in whose interest they were manifestly conceived and made.

That the rule embodied in the Wheeling Ordinance was not only arbitrary, and inequitable, but contrary to the usages of nations, and the principles of natural equity and public law, as enunciated by the great publicists and jurists of the world, and also as expressed by learned American authors, will be manifest from an examination of the extracts from the works and opinions of a number of these authorities which will be found in an appendix to this brief.

It will be seen that the authorities there quoted, with a single exception, all substantially agree that the rule of equity applicable to such a case is, that the common debt and common assets shall be apportioned between the two States ratably.

The only exception to this practically unbroken line of authority, is to be found in Mr. Hall's treatise on International Law. With entire deference for his ability, we respectfully submit, that the views of this learned author upon this subject are unsupported by reason or authority, and are repugnant to those principles of justice and right, from which the rules of International and Public Law derive their highest sanction.

If Mr. Hall is correct, then three-fourths, or four-fifths, of a State, could, by splitting off from the original State, escape liability for the common public debt of the unsevered Commonwealth, and leave that burden to rest exclusively upon the remaining parcel thereof.

The flagrant injustice of such a rule would be the same if it should be applied to this case, the only difference here being one, not in principle, but in degree; for, here the new St embraced perhaps one-third of the actual, and one-half of the prospective and potential resources and wealth of the original State, instead of three-fourths, or four-fifths thereof, as in the case just assumed.

The debt was created by the whole State, bound the whole State, and should be paid by the whole State.

Its obligations rested equally upon the whole State, and upon every part of it, and should have been, and should now be, borne by every part of the undivided Commonwealth, whether each part has received its ratable share of the expenditures made out of the money for which the debt was contracted, or not. It would be exceedingly difficult, indeed impossible, to apportion the debt upon any basis which would require each county, or each section, or each grand division, to contribute to its payment in proportion to the benefits actually received by such county, section, or grand division—and no sanction for any such principle will be found in the writings of the publicists and jurists who have considered and discussed these questions.

But, if it be true, as is indicated in the Bill, and as it can and will be demonstrated to be true, that the public debt of the Commonwealth was created largely for the constuction of works of internal improvement which would develop the vast resources of Western Virginia then known to be lying there in boundless but almost useless affluence; that some of the most important and most expensive of these works would not have been undertaken, if it had not been believed that their construction would have that effect; that the policy under which and the acts by which that debt was contracted received the warm and active support of the people of the counties which now constitute the new State; that a large part of that debt was contracted by the votes of a majority of the representatives from those counties, and against the wishes and the votes of a majority of the representatives in the General Assembly from the counties constituting the present State of Virginia; and that a very small part of the debt was or could have been created had the people from the counties now forming West Virginia, and their representatives in the General Assembly opposed its creation,—if these facts which are a part of the history of the Commonwealth, be true, how could the amount of money which was expended in West Virginia be, by possibility, any just or equitable measure of the share of that debt which, in good conscience, she should assume and pay?

Yet, by the Wheeling Ordinance, that is made the chief measure for determining the proportion of the common debt which the younger Virginia should assume and pay.

Tried by every test of authority, and every standard of principle and right, the basis of settlement prescribed by the Wheeling Ordinance, was, upon its face, arbitrary, illogical, and inequitable, and yet the learned counsel for West Virginia, would, by construction, give it a meaning which would make it work even greater hardship and injustice upon Virginia, than its language fairly interpreted would justify.

Here, then, we have an Ordinance which prescribes a plan of settlement, palpably unjust and inequitable, and in contravention of both common right, and of the common public law of the civilized world.

Such an enactment clearly comes within the time-honored rule, that a statute in derogation of common right or of common law must be strictly construed—and so construed as to conform it in its operation and effect, to the principles of right and justice and of the common law, so far as this can be done without violating the manifest expressed purpose of the statute.

See this Rule as applied to Acts in derogation of the common law.

This salutary rule, especially as to statutes in contravention of common right, but also as to those in derogation of the common law, is embodied in the jurisprudence of both Virginia and West Virginia.

To the same effect are a large number of decisions of other States, a few of which are:

Webb v. Baird, 6 Ind., 13.
Sewall v. Jones, 9 Pick., 412.

By the express terms of the 9th Section of the Wheeling Ordinance, it was provided that:

> "The new State shall take upon itself a just proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia prior to the first day of January, 1861, to be ascertained," &c.

That is the paramount and controlling mandate and stipulation of the clause which prescribes the portion of the debt which the new State shall assume and pay.

Our insistence is, that the residue of the clause should be so construed as to give effect to the righteous principle thus expressly made the rule by which West Virginia's liability under it shall be determined.

The enactment should be interpreted and applied so as to to defeat that purpose, ut res magis valeat quam pereat.

And so, whenever in stating the account between the two States under the provisions of the Ordinance, a question shall arise as to whether a particular item of charge against West Virginia shall be included in the account, such construction should be given to the Ordinance as will tend to place upon the new State a just proportion of the common indebtedness, rather than a construction which will tend to exonerate West Virginia from her just and equitable share thereof.

In other words, in the application of the arbitrary basis prescribed by the Ordinance, Virginia should, according to the equitable rules of construction which are especially applicable to this case, be given the benefit of every reasonable doubt.

If the construction and effect, which, as we understand their position, opposing council advocate, be given to that Ordinance, the Act of February 3, 1863, and to Section 8 of Article VIII of the first Constitution of West Virginia, the result will be one of palpable wrong and injustice to Virginia.

The whole Wheeling Ordinance will be found printed in full in the appendix to the opening brief of counsel for Virginia, upon this motion.

Its provisions and the language in which they were formulated, were manifestly the work of intelligent and able lawyers.

It fully specifies the terms upon which Virginia authorized the formation of the new State,—terms which having been recognized as being in the nature of things fundamental, and upon the acceptance of them, and the formation of a new State under them with the sanction of Congress, they became contractual, and operated as a covenant binding both States.

As a necessary corrollary to this, there results this now self-evident truth, namely, that no additional or new term could be added to that Ordinance, without the consent of Virginia.

While it is true that the opening brief of counsel for Virginia, upon this motion, did not accept the basis prescribed by the Wheeling Ordinance as having been irrevocably fixed, as the one by which the settlement must be made, and intimated that in the event that it should turn out upon the application of that scheme of accounting to the facts of the case, that it would "lead to absolutely unconscionable results, and operate to impair the obligation of the contracts by which the common debt was created, contracts which were obligatory alike upon Virginia and West Virginia, or for any other valid reason, then the scheme of settlement indicated by the Wheeling Ordinance would have to be discarded, and an equitable basis and scheme of settlement adopted."

In other words, if the basis prescribed by the Ordinance should, when applied, produce results which would shock the moral sense of mankind, and operate a fraud upon Virginia and the common creditors of both States, then it would be right for the court to adopt some other basis.

But the statement above quoted is immediately followed by this qualifying paragraph:

> "It is due to frankness to say, that, while the Wheeling Ordinance upon its face, prescribes an absolutely arbitrary basis of settlement, the representatives of Virginia are satisfied, that upon a fair, reasonable, and just construction of the language of that ordinance, and of the subsequent supplemental enactments, the scheme of settlement therein defined will, when applied to the facts as stated in the bill, and as it is believed they can be established by proofs, result in fixing the proportion of the debt of Virginia which West Virginia should assume and pay, inclusive of interest, at a very large sum, though not so large a sum as it would be equitable for West Virginia to pay."

Farther investigation and consideration convince the representatives of Virginia and her counsel that fairly construed and applied, as we believe they must be construed and applied by a court of equity, the Ordinance and the constating Acts which constitute as much a part of the plan of settlement adopted by the two States, as does the Ordinance itself, will not lead to any such unconscionable results, as would appear to be inevitable particularly if the Ordinance be taken by itself.

It may be that the framers of those instruments built fairer than they intended. It is pretty certain that they built fairer than they knew.

Clause III, pp. 6 to 8 of the opening brief upon this motion, succinctly and frankly states the position of the complainant in reference to the scheme of settlement which we seem to be shut up to.

The following quotation from that clause (p. 7 of opening brief):

"As was indicated by this court in its decision overruling the defendant's demurrer, the Wheeling Ordinance, and Section 8 of Article VIII of the first Constitution of West Virginia, must be taken and read together: So also these constating acts of February 3, and 4, 1863, and particularly of February 3, 1863, must be taken and read together with Section 9 of the Wheeling Ordinance, and with Section 8 of Article VIII of the first West Virginia Constitution, as together prescribing the terms and conditions on which the consent of the Commonwealth was given to the formation of the new State out of her territory, and the transfer to that new State when formed of any portion of the assets and property of the parent State." correctly expresses the views of complainant and her counsel upon this question, as the same are stated in the Bill, in the oral arguments and printed briefs of counsel for complainant upon the questions arising upon the demurrer, and as now stated in this brief, and as, in principle at least, sanctioned by the opinion of the court upon the questions raised by the demurrer.

Various questions are suggested by the brief of the distinguished counsel for West Virginia, in respect to the meaning and effect of that Ordinance, and the basis, and principles upon which the accounts between the two States should be stated, and the settlement between them made, which questions we agree should be now determined by the court, and directions given to its Master accordingly, so far as it is practicable to do so without working injustice.

These questions will be now considered:

I.

The first of them which we ask the court now to decide is: Whether West Virginia is not justly and ~~largely~~ legally chargeable with interest?

In this connection, we must remember that the contract which we are considering was a Virginia contract.

Under the law of Virginia as repeatedly adjudicated by her highest court, the interest is incident to the obligation,—and whenever a debt is due, the debtor is bound to pay interest unless relieved from this obligation by agreement. This is, and has been the law of the Commonwealth for more than one hundred years.

In Jones v. Williams, 2 Call, 106, decided in 1799, Edmund Pendleton, who was one of the great Judges of our country, delivering the opinion of the court said:

> "Interest is allowed because it is natural justice that he who has the use of anothers money should pay interest for it."

Cited with approval in Baker v. Morris, 10 Leigh, 284, McVeigh v. Howard, 87 Va., 599, and Stuart v. Hurt, 88 Va., 343.

In Hatcher v. Lewis, 4 Randolph, 152, 157, the court laid down the rule in the following expressive language:

> "The interest follows the principal as the shadow does the substance."

In Chapman v. Shepherd, the court said:

"In contracts for the payment of money, interest is not given as damages at the discretion of the court, or jury, but as an incident to the debt, which the court has no discretion to refuse."

Chapman v. Shepherd, 24 Gratt., 377, 384.
Roberts v. Cocke, 28 Gratt., 207.
Tidball v. Shenandoah National Bank, 100 Va., 741.

"Interest is favored both by the legislative and judicial bodies of the State."

Tazewell v. Saunders, 13 Gratt., 354, 370.

In McVeigh v. Howard, the Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia said: 87 Va. 699

"It is the settled rule that when no day is named in the bond or note given for the payment of a precedent debt, it is due and payable on the day of its date, and bears interest from that date, though no interest be reserved. Such an instrument like a bond or note payable, in Virginia, on demand, is payable presently, and bears interest from date. This doctrine is founded in good conscience and correct morals." * * *

Citing Jones v. Williams and Hatcher v. Lewis, quoted above.

Such is the law of Virginia as to interest.

The law of West Virginia in regard thereto is the same.

In Shipman v. Bailey, Judge Snyder, announcing the unanimous opinion of the Supreme Court of Appeals of that State, after citing a number of authorities upon the question, stated the rule as follows:

> "Other authorities of the same character might be cited, but, we think, we have given sufficient to establish the rule, which seems to be, that in contracts for the payment of money interest on the principal sum is a legal incident of the debt and a part of the contract, and wherever there is a contract for the payment of a specified legal rate of interest, whether such rate is fixed by the contract itself or by the law of the place where the contract is made, the obligation of the contract extends to the payment of such interest as fully as it does to the principal sum, and courts have no more power to change the rate of interest thus fixed, than they have to dispense with the enforcement of the contract either in whole or in part."

Shipman v. Bailey, 20 W. Va., 140, 146.

That decision reaffirms another proposition, applicable to this case, already a part of the jurisprudence of West Virginia, by the adjudications of the Supreme Court of Virginia rendered before the birth of the new State, namely, that the lex loci contractus controls in the matter of the interest chargeable against a debtor.

In Pickens v. McCoy, the court affirms Shipman v. Bailey, and adopts the language just quoted from that decision. 24 West Va., 344-352.

Independently of these West Virginia decisions, such parts of the common law, and of the laws of the State of Virginia as were in force on the 20th of June, 1863, when the first Constitution of West Virginia went into operation, and as are not repugnant to said Constitution, were continued and declared to be the law of West Virginia. Section 8 of Article XI of the first West Virginia Constitution.

The effect of this provision was to adopt for the new State the body of the common and statute laws of the Commonwealth, so far as the same were in force within the boundaries of the new State on the 20th of June, 1863.

As part of this body of laws, the law of Virginia as to interest became, and has continued to be, a part of the laws of West Virginia.

Such, then, was the law of Virginia before, at the time of and since the formation of West Virginia, as to the legal and equitable liability of a debtor or contractor to pay interest. Such has been the law of West Virginia since the hour of her birth. And such was, and is, the law of the contract evidenced by the public Acts of Virginia and West Virginia set forth in complainant's Bill.

The framers of the Wheeling Ordinance must be presumed to have drawn that instrument with reference to the principle of equity and justice which had then and long before that time been embodied in the laws of Virginia by the repeated decisions of her highest court.

To Virginia lawyers of that day, as since that time, Judge Coalter's apt formula of the doctrine that, "the interest follows the principal as the shadow does the substance," was as familiar as any other accepted rule of equity or of law.

Under the law of Virginia in force at the time of these transactions, interest upon the portion of the debt which West Virginia was to take upon herself, was an essential incident of the debt, and its payment as much a part of the obligation as was the payment of the principal.

But, even if the lex loci contractus had not brought us to this conclusion, the language of the ordinance itself, fairly construed, leads to the same result.

That language is that:

> "The new State shall take upon itself a just proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia prior to the first day of January, 1861," &c.

Now, that debt was an interest bearing debt. It was represented by obligations of the undivided State, some of them payable at a future day, some of them at a future day and thereafter at the pleasure of the Commonwealth, but all of them interest bearing obligations, obligations in which the payment of the stipulated interest was made as much a part of the debt as was the payment of the principal.

The interest was as much a part of the debt as was the principal, and as many of the bonds were payable thirty-four years after date, and some of them at the pleasure of Virginia with interest from date, the interest as to much of the debt constituted much the greater part of it.

It was the manifest intention of the enactors of that Ordinance, unless we are to ascribe to them the sinister purpose of perpetrating flagrant wrong and injustice upon Virginia, that the new State should take upon itself, and relieve what remained of the old State of a part of the burden of debt which rested upon both States. They knew that that burden consisted as well of interest, as principal, and as much, or more, of interest than of principal.

It was not proposed that the new State should, as soon as she became a State, pay in cash a sum to be ascertained in the manner indicated in the Ordinance. The framers of the Ordinance understood too well that, under the conditions then existing, it would be impossible for the new State to raise and pay any considerable sum in cash.

Why, the new State was dependent upon the old State for the money necessary to enable her to begin business, and she did not have, and in the nature of things could not command, a sufficient amount in cash to pay off one-fifth or even one-tenth of the then Virginia debt.

The stipulation was not that the new State should pay a sum in cash on account of its share of the common indebtedness; but that it should take upon itself a just proportion of that debt, to be ascertained as in the Ordinance prescribed.

Are we to understand that a court of conscience is to be asked to construe that stipulation to mean that the new State shall take upon itself only a proportion of a part of that debt? That it shall assume a share of the principal only of the debt, but shall be exonerated from any part of the interest which was, and is, as integral a part of the Virginia debt, and of the obligations which represent it, as the branches are a part of the tree from whose trunk they spring?

In their very elaborate reply brief upon this motion, opposing counsel devote very little attention to this important question, although it was plainly in their minds when they prepared their draft of decree, and although their attention was challenged to it by the opening brief for Virginia. There is some discussion of the question at pp. 35 to 37 of their brief, but that discussion ignores the facts and the principles upon which West Virginia's legal, "equitable," and "just" obligation to assume and pay the interest as well as the principal of her share of the debt, rests.

But West Virginia's equitable and legal liability to pay interest upon her share of the debt of Virginia does not depend alone upon the Wheeling Ordinance, or upon the law of Virginia and of West Virginia which makes the interest an essential part of a debt; but it rests also upon the express terms of the Constitution under which West Virginia became a State.

Now, by the Act of the Virginia Legislature at Wheeling, of May 13, 1862, the validity of which we no longer question, for reasons hereinbefore stated, Virginia gave her consent to the formation of the new State out of her territory, "under the provisions set forth in the Constitution for said State of West Virginia and the schedule thereto annexed, proposed by the Convention which assembled at Wheeling on the 26th da November, 1861."

It is true that this consent was predicated upon West Virginia's being erected into a State under the provisions of that identical Constitution, without the performance of which condition that consent was abortive and ineffectual.

The fact is, that at the behest of Congress, that Constitution was subsequently amended in a material particular, which change, unless objection thereto had been waived, or the change assented to by the Legislature of Virginia, would have rendered the previous conditional consent null and void.

But since the opening brief upon this motion was filed the counsel for Virginia who writes this brief, has discovered the following joint resolution, which it seems was adopted by the Legislature of Virginia at Wheeling, on the 9th of December, 1862:

> "No. 2. Joint Resolution requesting the House of Representatives of the United States to take up and pass without amendment, the bill for the admission of the State of West Virginia, passed by the United States Senate on the 10th of July last.
> Passed December 9, 1862.
> Resolved, That feeling the greatest anxiety and interest in the successful issue of the movement for a new State in West Virginia, we earnestly request the House of Representatives of the United States to take up and pass, without alteration or amendments, the bill which passed the Senate of the United States on the 10th of July last."

See "Constitution and Statutes Va. & West Va., 1861-66."

This resolution was telegraphed to Washington on the evening of the day on which it was passed. History of West Virginia by Lewis, p. 389.

The Senate Bill referred to in the resolution was taken up in the House of Representatives, and passed on the 10th of December, and was approved by President Lincoln and became a law on the 31st of December, 1862, in the very form in which the Legislature of Virginia had by its Joint Resolution of the 9th of December, 1862, requested and urged that it should be passed.

This Act of Congress to which the Legislature of Virginia had thus given its assent, made it a condition of the admission of the new State into the Union, that its proposed Constitution should be amended in the particular in which it was afterwards amended by the Convention and people of West Virginia, in regard to the emancipation of slaves.

The effect of said Joint Resolution, was, under these circumstances, to waive any objection by the Legislature of Virginia to the amendment made to the Constitution of West Virginia at the instance of Congress, and to make the consent given by the Act of May 13, 1862, effective, notwithstanding that amendment.

What, then, was the effect of the admission of West Virginia to the Union under the consent thus given, and the Constitution upon which that consent was predicated?

It will not be denied that the condition upon which the consent of the Legislature of Virginia was given to the formation of West Virginia and her admission into the Union as a State, was, that she should become a State under the provisions of the Constitution under which her statehood was sanctioned by Congress.

Among the most important of those provisions, so far as Virginia was concerned, were those expressed in Article VIII of that Constitution in reference to the public debt.

Section 8 of that Article reads as follows:

> "8. An equitable proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia prior to the first day of January, 1861, shall be assumed by this State, and the Legislature shall ascertain the same as soon as may be practicable and provide for the liquidation thereof by a sinking fund sufficient to pay the accruing interest and redeem the principal within thirty-four years."

We have a right to assert that, unless West Virginia had been required to assume and pay an equitable proportion of the Virginia debt in manner and form as was expressly prescribed in this Section, the consent of the Legislature of Virginia would never have been given to the creation of the new State.

These were, therefore, fundamental conditions of West Virginia's existence.

By accepting these conditions, the new State became bound in equity and in law to perform them in good faith.

Upon grounds which have been already indicated, as sufficient and controlling we are constrained to concede that Section 8 of Article VIII of the first West Virginia Constitution, and Section 9 of the Wheeling Ordinance being in pari materia, must be read together, and that the proportion of the debt which the new State was required by this provision of her Constitution to assume, was to be ascertained in the manner prescribed by the Ordinance.

But the Constitution goes farther, and expressly provides as to the equitable proportion of the debt which West Virginia should assume, that her Legislature should "provide for the liquidation thereof by a sinking fund sufficient to pay the accruing interest and redeem the principal within thirty-four years."

This was precisely in accordance with the plan which had long theretofore been adopted by the Commonwealth for the payment of her debt.

This plan was embodied not only in the statutes, but also in the Constitution of Virginia in force when West Virginia, became a State.

It was embodied in that Constitution in the following terms:

> "29. There shall be set apart annually, from the accruing revenues, a sum equal to seven per cent. of the State debt existing on the first day of January in the year one thousand eight hundred and fifty-two. The fund thus set apart shall be called the sinking fund, and shall be applied to the payment of the interest of the State debt, and the principal of such part as may be redeemable. If no part be redeemable, then the residue of the sinking fund, after the payment of such interest, shall be invested in the bonds or certificates of debt of this Commonwealth, or of the United States, or of some of the States of this Union, and applied to the payment of the State debt as it shall become redeemable. Whenever, after the said first day of January, a debt shall be contracted by the Commonwealth, there shall be set apart in like manner, annually, for thirty-four years, a sum exceeding by one per cent. the aggregate amount of the annual interest agreed to be paid thereon at the time of its contraction; which sum shall be part of the sinking fund, and shall be applied in the manner before directed. The General Assembly shall not otherwise appropriate any part of the sinking fund or its accruing interest, except in time of war, insurrection or invasion."

Section 29 of the Constitution of Virginia, in force from January 1, 1852, Code of Virginia for 1860, p. 47.

It was expressed in a concrete form and given further effect by the second Section of the following Act passed by the General Assembly of Virginia:

"Chap. 17.—An Act establishing a sinking fund and providing for the payment of the semi-annual interest on and redemption of the public debt.

Passed March 26, 1853.

"2. Whenever after the said first day of January, eighteen hundred and fifty-two, a debt shall be contracted by the Commonwealth, there shall be set apart, in like manner, annually for thirty-four years, a sum exceeding by one per cent. the aggregate amount of the annual interest agreed to be paid thereon at the time of its contraction, which sum shall be part of the sinking fund, and shall be applied in the manner hereinbefore directed."

Its effect was, therefore, well understood to be to conform the undertaking of West Virginia in regard to the time and manner of the payment of her share of the debt to the plan and scheme of payment which had been adopted by the Commonwealth, and which experience had approved.

That scheme was the creation from the annual revenues of the State, of a fund equivalent to seven per centum of the principal of the debt. Of this, six per centum went to pay the annually accruing interest, and one per centum was invested and set apart to retire the principal sum due, within thirty-four years, and this arrangement was defined as a sinking fund.

It was found, and if the calculation is made it will be shown to be true, that one per centum of any sum invested and compounded at six per centum interest per annum, will in thirty-four years produce an amount equal to such sum.

This was the theory and the plan which Virginia had adopted for the liquidation of her debt.

It was a plan with which Messrs. Willey, Van Winkle, Hall, Brown, Haymond, and other members of the first West Virginia Convention, who had been previously members and some of them able members of the General Assembly of Virginia, were doubtless entirely familiar: And it is the same plan which we find incorporated in the scheme of settlement which constitutes a part of the foundation upon which West Virginia's existence as a State rests.

By this clause of West Virginia's Constitution, therefore, it was required, not that the new State should pay a lump sum in cash, to be ascertained in the manner prescribed, but that she should assume "an equitable proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth" existing on the 31st of December, 1860, and should "provide for the liquidation thereof by a sinking fund sufficient to pay the accruing interest and redeem the principal within thirty-four years."

The framers of the West Virginia Constitution thus manifestly adopted, and engrafted upon that instrument, the plan which for nine years or more had been a part of the organic and statutory law of Virginia for the extinguishment of her public debt, and the Legislature of Virginia accepted and approved that plan.

That plan included, (as the West Virginia Constitution also expressly included), an undertaking on the part of the Commonwealth to pay the accruing interest, and to liquidate or redeem the principal of each bond representing the debt, within thirty-four years.

(This statement is subject to this qualification, that as to a considerable portion of the debt, particularly that contracted prior to 1852, like English consols, the principal was redeemable at the pleasure of Virginia).

In simple language, the stipulation of West Virginia expressed in her Constitution, and accepted and acted upon by Virginia, was, that West Virginia would pay the accruing interest on her share of the debt, as it should accrue, and the principal thereof within thirty-four years.

That such was her express undertaking, appears from the language of her first Constitution, interpreted according to the reasonable and natural meaning of that language.

That such was the purpose, meaning, and effect of that language, is conclusively shown when we read it in the light of the plan established by the Constitution and statute of Virginia, then in force, for the establishment of a sinking fund for the liquidation of her public debt, which plan was adopted by the new State as to its share of that debt.

And so, we find that both by the express terms of the Wheeling Ordinance fairly construed, and by the express terms of the Constitution under which Virginia and the National Congress consented that West Virginia should become a State, this new State has become expressly obligated to pay interest upon the share of the principal of the common public debt for which she is liable. U. S. v North Carolina, 136 U.S. 211

Another question which arises in connection with the consideration of this subject, is, from what time is West Virginia justly and equitably bound to pay that interest?

Answer to this is furnished by the Wheeling Ordinance and by the Section of the first West Virginia Constitution above quoted.

The settlement by the terms of both instruments was to be made as of the arbitrary date of January 1, 1861, or to be precisely accurate, as of December 31, 1860. That, accordingly, is the date from which fairly, equitably, and legally, (because it accords with the express terms of both the Ordinance and the Constitution) the interest should be computed.

As already shown, the debt, a proportion of which as of that date, West Virginia was to assume and pay, was an interest bearing debt, and the interest was as integral a part of it as was the principal.

A farther kindred inquiry to the last is: To what time should West Virginia be required to pay such interest?

Our response to this is, that she is justly, equitably, and legally bound to pay this interest,

(1) By the terms of the Wheeling Ordinance, certainly, for the period during which the debt of the Commonwealth existing on the 31st of December, 1860, would continue to be an interest bearing debt: And we have seen that that was not only until the obligations representing the debt became due, but under the just rule of the law of Virginia as to interest, in force during the whole period of the creation of the debt, until that principal should be fully paid.

(2) By the terms of the Section of her Constitution above quoted, West Virginia undertook that her Legislature should assume and pay the accruing interest and the principal of her share of that debt in thirty-four years.

Her Legislature has failed either to assume, or to pay that [illegible], or any part of it.

The interest accruing thereon from December 31, 1860, has ontinued to accrue, as to her, until it now amounts to vastly more than the principal. It was that interest which West Virginia agreed to pay, and it was that principal for the payment of which West Virginia's Legislature was to make provision, so that the same should be paid within thirty-four years.

We are unwilling to anticipate that the learned and fair-minded counsel for the defendant will argue that West Virginia, by the language of that provision of her Constitution, is only bound to pay interest for thirty-four years from December 31, 1860, or from June 20, 1863, because we are unwilling to assume that our distinguished opponents would contend that a State, any more than an individual, should be allowed to take advantage of her own wrong, or profit by her own procrastination, and neglect of duty.

Here, West Virginia has not only not taken upon herself a just, or any other proportion of the common public debt, nor provided for the payment of the accruing interest thereon, and for the payment of the principal, but she has persistently failed and refused to do either of these things, and has by the votes of her Legislature, repeatedly repudiated any and all liability whatever for any part of that indebtedness.

(See Resolutions of Legislature of West Virginia in Appendix).

With all deference for the distinguished counsel for the defendant, we venture to believe that a court of equity will not allow any defendant, and particularly a State, which should be an exemplar of fair and honorable dealing in all of its transactions, to make gain out of its own palpable dereliction of duty.

And so, our response to such contention, if it shall be urged is, that equity will not suffer any party to take advantage of his own wrong.

Here, fortunately for West Virginia, it will, by reason of her increased wealth and prosperity, be far easier for her to pay the principal and the accumulated interest now, than it would have been to have paid the interest annually as it accrued, and the principal thirty-four years from 1861, or 1863. West Virginia could pay thirty million of dollars now, with as little inconvenience as she could have paid three or four millions thirty-five or forty years ago.

If there ever was a case to which the benign doctrine of Virginia law, that "interest follows the principal as the shadow does the substance," should be applied; we seem to have such a case here.

Nor is there any extravagance in the language of our opening brief upon this motion, when we say that,

> "any settlement which does not require that State to pay interest during the long period of her default and refusal to pay anything, would be not only unjust and inequitable, but iniquitous."

II.

The Wheeling Ordinance provides; that in ascertaining the just proportion of the debt which the new State shall take upon itself, it shall be charged with;

> "all the State expenditures within the limits thereof, and a just proportion of the ordinary expenses of the State government since any part of said debt was contracted, and deducting therefrom the moneys paid into the treasury of the Commonwealth from the counties included in said new State during said period."

There cannot well be any question as to what will be included in the first item of the debit charge against the new State under this language. It includes all expenditures of whatever kind made by Virginia in any part of the territory embraced in the new State, since any part of the debt was contracted. There will be no controversy as to the earliest date when any part of the debt existing on the 31st of December, 1860, was contracted.

Part of the debt, then unpaid, was created as far back as 1820. So, the period covered by the account will be from, say, January 1, 1820.

There is likely to be some question as to what shall be regarded as under the circumstances, a just proportion of the ordinary expenses to be charged to West Virginia.

As to the criterion on which the apportionment of the expenses of government should be made, if that is to be the population, we respectfully submit that in this case it should be the free populations—the citizenship—and not the total of the free and the slave population. The care and policing of the slaves cost the State little or nothing. Those matters were regulated by their masters on the plantations. Of course, none of them could vote; but upon the "mixed basis" of representation which was partially adopted in Virginia, they counted to some extent in fixing the basis of representation in the General Assembly; that is, five negroes counted as much as three white men, where the mixed basis prevailed.

The debt was contracted solely by the votes of the white population or their representatives. It was expended by them or under laws of their enactment. The taxes were levied exclusively upon the property of the free population; and the revenues were appropriated and expended as they directed, and exclusively for their benefit.

The negroes did not constitute a part of the citizenship of the State during any part of the period when the debt was contracted, or the money realized from it was expended; nor were they any part of the body politic.

Under these circumstances we would submit as a just criterion for such apportionment the white population of the territory embraced in West Virginia, and of the territory still remaining to the Commonwealth, at the times when the expenditures to be apportioned were made.

However, there is not probably, as yet, enough in the record to enable the court to decide this question intelligently; or satisfactorily.

III.

Another and quite an important question which can probably be fairly considered and decided, upon what is now in the record, and which should be decided now, if a just conclusion about it can be reached at this time; is, whether West Virginia shall be charged, in the settlement to be made, with the property or assets which she has received from the Commonwealth?

The Act of the Virginia Legislature at Wheeling, of February 3, 1863, which is printed in the appendix to the opening brief for Virginia on this motion, expressly provides that "the new State shall duly account for the same in the settlement hereafter to be made with this State." See Section 5 of the Act of February 3, 1863.

Counsel for West Virginia deny that these important items shall be brought into the account; and in order to have any ground on which to base their objection, they contend that the Acts of February 3 and 4, 1863, were not binding upon West Virginia; that her rights were determined by the Wheeling Ordinance, and by the provisions of her first Constitution, and by the Act of May 13, 1862, of the Virginia Legislature at Wheeling, and the Act of Congress approved December 31, 1862, giving the consent of the Congress to the formation of the new State and her admission to the Union; that these Acts were all effective, and the rights of the new State definitely determined by them before the Acts of February, 1863, were passed; and that those Acts of the Virginia Legislature of February 3 and 4, 1863, were not binding upon West Virginia, and imposed no obligation upon her, because she had already, by reason of the consent given by Virginia to her statehood, been absolutely vested with the very rights which the Act of February 3rd, undertook to confer upon her upon conditions.

The answer to this argument, vigorously and ably as it is presented, is complete.

The position of the counsel for the defendant upon this point would find support in the doctrine laid down by Mr. Hall, if there had been no agreement between Virginia and West Virginia as to the terms upon which the partition of the old State should be made, and the debt thereafter apportioned between the two States; but neither Mr. Hall, nor any other authority will be found to sanction the proposition, that, where a new State has been erected out of the territory of the old State by treaty or by a convention between the mother State and the new State any such doctrine applies.

The rule in that case logically, and necessarily is, and must be, that where the two States have undertaken to define and prescribe the terms upon which the new State shall be created, the rights and obligations of the two States will thereafter be determined absolutely by the stipulations and provisions of such treaty or convention.

The elementary rule of universal application, that a party will not be allowed to add to, or to take from, the terms of a valid written instrument applies with intensified force to a compact between two sovereign States.

The Wheeling Ordinance, which taken together with the first Constitution of the State of West Virginia; the Act of the Virginia Legislature at Wheeling, of May 13, 1862, giving the consent of the Legislature of Virginia to the formation of the new State under the provisions of that Constitution, and the Act of Congress approved December 31, 1862, giving the consent of Congress to the creation of the new State and to her admission into the Union, constitute a compact; and to this compact no new term can be added, and no term prescribed therein can be taken away.

Now, the Wheeling Ordinance, and the article of the Constitution of West Virginia referred to, are absolutely silent upon the subject of the property and assets of the Commonwealth of Virginia. While the Wheeling Ordinance, with the greatest particularity, undertakes to prescribe and define minutely the terms upon which the new State shall be created, its boundaries, and the rights of property of individuals residing therein, it makes no provision whatever in respect to property held by Virginia in her corporate capacity, whether it be personal or real. As a necessary effect of the terms of that Ordinance, the title and ownership to that property remained, after its enactment, and after the formation of the new State of West Virginia, just where they were vested before the Ordinance was enacted; and that is, in the Commonwealth of Virginia.

As already indicated no new term can be incorporated in, or added to, that Ordinance, without the consent of Virginia; and yet, the learned counsel for the defendant would have the court, by a forced construction to interpolate a new term into this Ordinance which was, as we have a right to assume, intentionally excluded from it by the parties who framed it.

If there is any contract or covenant to which the doctrine of expressio unius est exclusio alterius ought to apply, it is to a compact like this between States, affecting the rights of the people of those States for all coming time.

The men who framed the Wheeling Ordinance and the Constitution of West Virginia among whom were evidently lawyers of a higher order of ability, intelligence, and learning, must have fully realized the meaning and effect of the Wheeling Ordinance, and must have known that it did not transfer to the new State any title or ownership in respect to any of the property and assets which Virginia owned in her corporate capacity; for we find that they, or some of them, were instrumental in the enactment of the Act of February 3, 1863, which undertook to cure this omission, which was doubtless an intentional omission, and to vest in the new State the property and assets of Virginia, the situs of which was within the limits of the new State, upon the just and equitable terms that the new State should account in that settlement for the value of all such property, in the settlement to be made between the two States.

The only settlement to be made between the two States, was the settlement in regard to the public debt; and the purpose of the Act of February 3, 1863, was to provide that the new State should account in that settlement for the value of the assets and property which she should acquire from Virginia under that Act.

The Legislature of Virginia at Wheeling had the right to exercise supreme dominion over the territory and people of West Virginia at the time that the Act of February 3, 1863, was passed; subject only to the limitations of the Constitutions of Virginia, and of the United States; so that the Act of February 3, 1863, was clearly within the competency of the Legislature of Virginia to enact; nor can we be blind to the fact that the portion of the territory of Virginia which was represented by Senators and Delegates in the Legislature at Wheeling, was practically coincident with the territory of the proposed new State of West Virginia; so that it was in fact the representatives of the people who were about to form themselves into the State of West Virginia, who enacted the Act of February 3, 1863.

Upon these grounds, we can fairly claim that the Act of February 3, 1863, was a valid law, and binding upon the people who afterwards constituted the State of West Virginia.

But that Act has still farther sanctions which make it absolutely binding upon the people of West Virginia.

The 8th Section of Article XI of the first Constitution of West Virginia is as follows:

> "8. Such parts of the common law and of the laws of the State of Virginia as are in force within the boundaries of the State of West Virginia, when this Constitution goes into operation; and are not repugnant thereto, shall be and continue the law of this State until altered or repealed by the Legislature." * * *
> Article XI, Section 8, 1st West Virginia Constitution; effective June 20, 1863.

We respectfully insist that the effect of this provision of the Constitution was to sanction and continue in force the Acts of February 3 and 4, 1863, both of which were in force within the boundaries of the State of West Virginia at the time that that Constitution went into operation.

But this Act of February 3, 1863, has received still farther and express sanction and acceptance by a positive enactment of the Legislature of West Virginia. Section 8 of the Act of the Legislature of West Virginia, approved December 20, 1875, Acts of the Legislature of West Virginia, Session of 1875, p. 126, is as follows:

> "8. The Auditor shall institute all the necessary and appropriate measures for the collection of all claims for taxes and other demands transferred by the Commonwealth of Virginia to this State by an act of the General Assembly of said Commonwealth entitled 'an act transferring to the proposed State of West Virginia, when the same shall become one of the United States, all the State's interest in property; unpaid and uncollected taxes, fines; forfeitures, penalties and judgments in counties embraced within the boundaries of the proposed State aforesaid;' passed on the third day of February, 1863."

And therefore, we respectfully, but earnestly, claim that West Virginia is equitably, legally, and justly, bound to account for all property and assets, whether real or personal, which she has received from the Commonwealth of Virginia; in the settlement which it is the object of this suit to bring about.

There is, we think; enough in the record to show that no equitable settlement can be made between the two States upon the basis of the Wheeling Ordinance and the constating Acts referred to, unless there shall be brought into the account with West Virginia a fair charge against her for such assets, money, or property as she has received under the Acts of February 3 and 4, 1863, and upon the fullest examination and consideration which we have been able to give to the subject.

we are satisfied that even then the amount with which West Virginia will be chargeable on account of the public debt of the undivided State, will be far less than she ought to have assumed and paid if we have reference to all of the facts, and all of the equities of the case.

It is proper to state here that in so far as any property or money which West Virginia acquired from Virginia, either under the Acts of February 3 and 4, 1863, or otherwise, was property which was acquired by Virginia by the expenditure of money within the limits of the State of West Virginia, or money paid by Virginia, after 1819, the new State will, of course, be chargeable with the amount so expended or paid by the Commonwealth, under the Wheeling Ordinance, and not under the Act of February 3, 1863, in the settlement to be made between the two States, for the Wheeling Ordinance provides that the new State shall be charged with all expenditures made within its limits by the Commonwealth of Virginia, since any part of the debt was contracted.

Counsel for Virginia will file a modified draft of decree in conformity with the views presented in this brief; which we will respectfully ask the court to consider, and to enter, if they shall approve the same.

Respectfully submitted

WILLIAM A. ANDERSON,

Attorney General and as such Counsel for Virginia.

APPENDIX No. 1.

To Reply Brief for Complainant on motion for order of reference in Virginia v. West Virginia.

The doctrine of the apportionment of the public debt of a State, which is divided into two or more States.

Grotius states the principle as follows:

> "On the other hand it may happen that what has been one State, is divided, either by mutual consent or by hostile force, as the body of the Persian Empire was divided among the successors of Alexander.. When this transpires, several sovereignties exist instead of one, each with its own rights; but if anything had been in common; that ought either to be administered in common, or divided in portions pro rata."
>
> Grotius' Book II; Chapter 9; Section 8.

And Puffendorf says:

> "Where a kingdom divides by common consent into two or more distinct Commonwealths, the public patrimony with all the debts and incumbrances upon them, ought to be equally shared among them. Tho' indeed when such separations are made by mutual agreement, there is commonly express provision made for such cases."
>
> Puffendorf's Law of Nature & Nations, Book VIII, Chapter 12; Section 5.

Chancellor Kent thus concisely states the doctrine:

> "If a State should be divided in respect to territory, its rights and obligations are not impaired, and if they have not been apportioned by special agreement, those rights are to be enjoyed; and those obligations fulfilled, by all the parts in common."
>
> 1 Kent's Comm. pp. 25-26.

Phillimore thus clearly states the rule:

> "If a nation be divided into various distinct societies, the obligations which had accrued to the whole before division, are, unless they have been the subject of a special agreement, ratably binding upon the different parts."
>
> 1 Phillimore International Law, Part II, Chapter 137, M. p. 158.

Pomeroy expresses the rule in the identical language of Mr. Phillimore.

Pomeroy's International Law, Section 74.

Mr. Dana expresses himself as to one phase of the doctrine as follows:

> "In the separations and re-arrangments of nations in Europe, special provisions are usually made for the payment of public debts; and the principle seems admitted; that, in case of a division of a State, each new State is bound for the whole debt contracted by the former; and; in the case of a union of States; it seems equally clear that, as the whole must defend the part in war which is the international process of attachment it must practically pay the debt, although the foreign power may look only to the people and land of the State which made the contract. The formation of the new State so alters the nature of all the securities the creditor looked to; that the new State has a general obligation to see that he does not suffer by the change.

See Article 13 of treaty of 1839 for the separation of Belgium; and the treaty of Zurich, ceding Lombardy to Sardinia."

Wheaton's Int. L.—Edited, with notes, by Richard Henry Dana, Section 30, Note 18.

Mr. Halleck, after stating the effect of the dismemberment of a State by the loss of a portion of its territory by foreign conquest, or by the revolt and separation of a province, says:

"§27. The case is slightly different where one state is divided into two or more distinct and independent sovereignties. In that case, the obligations which had accrued to the whole, before the division are, (unless they have been the subject of a special agreement), ratably binding upon the different parts. This principle is established by the concurrent opinions of text-writers; the decisions of courts, and the practice of nations. It was incorporated into the treaty by which the modern kingdom of Belgium was established."

Halleck's International Law & Laws of War; Section 27.

Mr. John Bassett Moore thus states the doctrine:

> "In the event of a State being divided into two or more independent sovereignties, the obligations which had accrued to the whole before the division are ratably binding on the different parts; for as Story says, 'the division of an Empire creates no forfeiture of previous vested rights of property.'"
>
> 1 Moore's Digest Int. L. p. 334, citing > Abdy's Kent, p. 96, and > Lawrence's Wheaton, 52 (m) 20.

A number of precedents are cited by Mr. Moore in Vol. I, Section 97, pp. 339-365, of his Digest of International Law, giving the terms upon which public debts of States have been divided and apportioned, by conventions, or treaties, between the States affected, in cases where there has been a division of territory by war, conquest; or treaty.

No sanction for the rule prescribed in the Wheeling Ordinance will be found in any of the adjustments of public debts, there recorded by the learned author.

Judge Story declared the following fundamental truth:

> "It has been asserted as a principle of the common law, that the division of an empire creates no forfeiture of previously vested rights of property.
>
> And this principle is equally consonant with the common sense of mankind and the maxims of eternal justice."
>
> Mr. Justice Story in Terrett and others v. Taylor and others, 9 Cranch, 43; 50, citing Kelly v. Harrison, 2 Johnson, c. 29, Jackson v. Lunn; 3 Johnson, c. 109.

In Hartman v. Greenhow, 102 U. S. 672-677, Mr. Justice Field states the rule of international law in the following language:

> "Writers on public law speak of the principle as well established, that where a State is divided into two or more States, in the adjustment of liabilities between each other, the debts of the parent State should be ratably apportioned among them. On this subject Kent says: 'If a State should be divided in respect to territory, its rights and obligations are not impaired; and if they have not been apportioned by special agreement, their rights are to be enjoyed and their obligations fulfilled by all the parts in common.' 1 Com., 26. And Halleck, speaking of a State divided into two or more distinct and independent sovereignties says: 'In that case, the obligations which have accrued to the whole before the division are, unless they have been the subject of a special agreement, ratably binding upon the different parts. This principle is established by the concurrent opinions of text writers; the decisions of courts, and the practice of nations.'" Interna. L., ch. 3, section 27."

And this language was again approved by Mr. Justice Field in his dissenting opinion in Antoni v. Greenhow, (in which opinion Mr. Justice Harlan concurred), 107 U. S. 769-7, where the following language is used:

> "It is a well settled doctrine of public law, that, upon a division of a State into two or more States, her debts shall be ratably apportioned among them. See authorities upon this subject in Hartman v. Greenhow, 102 U. S., 677."

The only dissent from the principles thus enunciated by this long line of authorities by any author whose opinions would carry any weight upon such a subject, which we have been able to discover, is to be found in the dogma of Mr. Hall; in his work on International Law, where that learned author says:

> "§27. When a new State splits off from one already existing, it necessarily steps into the enjoyment of all rights which are conferred upon it by international law in virtue of its existence as an international person, and it becomes subject to all obligations which are imposed upon it in the same way. No question therefore presents itself with respect to the general rights and duties of a new State. What, however, is its relation to the contract obligations of the State from which it has been separated; to property belonging to and privileges enjoyed by the latter, and to property belonging in common, before the occurrence of the separation, to subjects of the original state in virtue of their status as such, when some of them after the separation become subjects of the new State?
> The fact of the personality of a state is the key to the answer. With rights which have been acquired, and obligations which have been contracted, by the old State as personal rights and obligations the new State has nothing to do. The old State is not extinct, it is still there to ful- The new State, on the other hand, is an entirely fresh be- fill its contract duties, and to enjoy its contract rights. ing. It neither is, nor does it represent, the person with whom other States have contracted, they may have no reason for giving it the advantages which have been accorded to the person with whom the contract was made; and it would be unjust to saddle it with liabilities which it would not have accepted on its own account. What is true as between the new State and foreign powers, is true also as between it and the old State. From the moment of independence all trace of the joint life is gone. Apart from special agreement no survival of it is possible, and the two States are merely two beings possessing no other claims on one another than those which are conferred by the bare provisions of international law. And as the old State continues its life uninterruptedly, it possesses everything belonging to it as a person, which it has not expressly lost, so that property, and advantages secured to it by treaty, which are enjoyed by it as a personal whole, or by its subjects in virtue of their being members of that whole, continue to belong to it. On the other hand, rights possessed in respect of the lost territory, including rights under treaties relating to cessions of territory and demarcations of boundary, obligations contracted with reference to it alone, and property which is within it, and which has therefore a local character, or which, though not within it, belongs to State institutions localized there, transfer themselves to the new State person. Conversely, of course, the old State person remains in sole enjoyment of its separate territory, and of all local rights connected with it.

* * * * * * * * * * * * *

Property which becomes transferred by the fact of separation consists in domains, public buildings, museums and art collections, communal lands, charitable and other endowments connected with the State, and the like. When a portion of the lands belonging to a commune or to an endowment lies without the boundary of the new State it is only considered that a right to the value of the property is transferred. Convenience may dictate expropriation from the property itself; and it is only then necessary to pay its full value by way of compensation."

Hall's International Law, Sec. 27.

The fallacy of the positions taken by this learned author will be manifest when we reflect, that, if the Wheeling Conventions and Legislatures had chosen to annex, and had annexed fifty or sixty other counties to the new State, so that it would have embraced more than two thirds of the population and territory and actual and potential wealth, public properties, assets and resources of the undivided Commonwealth, the new State would have taken a good title to all of those assets, properties, and resources, free and discharged from any liability whatever for any part of the antecedent public debt of the Commonwealth, if the ordinances and other public acts of the Wheeling Conventions and Legislatures had omitted to impose any obligation upon the new State to assume and pay any part of that public debt.

Such a result would shock the moral sense of mankind; and yet, it would be no more unjust and inequitable than that which would confront us here, if the views of this eminent author are correct, had the Wheeling Conventions and Legislatures failed to prescribe any stipulations, provisions, or conditions as to the apportionment of the antecedent common public debt between the two States.

APPENDIX No. 2.

TO REPLY BRIEF FOR COMPLAINANT ON MOTION FOR ORDER OF REFERENCE IN VIRGINIA V. WEST VIRGINIA.

Extracts from message of Joseph Johnson, of Harrison, Governor of Virginia, to the General Assembly of Virginia, January 12, 1852. See Journal, House of Delegates, 1852, pp. 18-19.

"The subject of internal improvement, which for many years has engaged the anxious attention of our people, is rapidly increasing in interest and importance, and will require your most serious and careful consideration. Whether we look to the vast amount of capital already invested by the State in the enterprise, or the appropriations yet required to carry out successfully the schemes already begun, and thereby make them available for revenue and State purposes—or consider the magnitude of the objects sought to be obtained, and the importance of the results anticipated from their completion in the aid they will give in developing the mineral and agricultural resources and the manufacturing and commercial advantages of our State—all will see and be forced to acknowledge the importance of the subject, and the great and growing necessity for energetic and yet judicious action on your part in relation to it. Indeed the works of internal improvement already commenced and in course of construction, and upon which large sums of both public and private means have been expended, are so intimately connected with all the leading interests of the Commonwealth, that every year's delay in their completion will necessarily postpone, at a common loss to the whole people, great and incalculable blessings, and for an equal period of time defer to the State treasury that repletion which the heavy appropriations heretofore made for internal improvement purposes so earnestly demand, and which their final completion cannot fail to effect. Many of our sister States, with less capacity for such enterprises, and possessing natural resources and advantages far inferior to our own, have, under circumstances of great embarrassment, executed works of internal improvement which would do honor to the enterprise of independent nations. Nor have they been disappointed in the individual or State benefit which their works were expected to impart. The citizens of those States feel the superiority of this improved condition of their country, and duly appreciate the increased comforts derived from it.

"If our generous and noble old Commonwealth has been tardy in the execution of those improvements most clearly indicated by the geological structure of the country, and in a proper development of her great physical resources, it is gratifying to consider, that profiting by the example of others, she may gain much of the loss in time, by wise, prompt and energetic measures hereafter."

Then, after recommending the completion of the James River & Kanawha Canal to Clifton Forge, Governor Johnson says:

"From this point I most earnestly recommend the construction of a railroad, on State account, to some point on the Ohio river deemed most eligible upon a full reconnoissance of the several routes heretofore contemplated, having in view the valuable trade of that river and ultimately a railroad connection with the cities of Cincinnati and Louisville. In connection with this line, I recommend that every proper aid should be given for the speedy completion of the central railroad from Richmond to the point proposed at the present terminus of the canal, and that from Alexandria to Gordonsville. The railroad from the canal to Loup creek shoals would not exceed 150 miles, (to which point steamboats are now accessible), and from which to Guayandotte, should that point be selected as the terminus, it would be about 82 miles, making 232 miles of railroad. The water line by the Kanawha would be about 80, and strike the Ohio 40 miles above Guyandotte—thus giving the section of road between Loup creek shoals and Clifton Forge the double importance of being connected at both ends with water and railroad lines. The best energy of the State should therefore be turned to the speedy completion of this division of the work. There is little doubt that the Alexandria and Orange railroad and the Blue Ridge tunnel may be completed, and the Central railroad and the canal be carried to Clifton Forge by the time the railroad from the latter place to the Ohio river can be finished."

Now comes the State of West Virginia, the defendant herein, and availing itself of the leave granted by the interlocutory decree heretofore entered in this cause, respectfully moves the court to modify the said decree to the end that the same may be more definite and certain in the particulars hereinafter set forth:

First. By amending paragraph two to read as follows:

> "The territorial area and assessed valuation of the States of Virginia and West Virginia June 20, 1863, and the population thereof, with and without slaves, separately stated, including in the latter State the counties of Berkeley and Jefferson."

Second. By adding at the end of paragraph three thereof the words:

> "Prior to January 1, 1861."

Third. By amending paragraph four so as to read as follows:

> "The ordinary expenses of the government of Virginia since any of said debt was contracted and prior to January 1, 1861, on the basis of the average total population of Virginia, with and without slaves, as shown by the census of the United States."

Fourth. By amending paragraph five by striking out the words "fair estimated" where they occur in the first line, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "assessed" and by adding at the end thereof the words "during the same period," so that the same will read:

COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA, COMPLAINANT,

vs.

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA.

MEMORANDUM FOR DEFENDANT.

It will be observed that in paragraph II of this draft of a decree the master is not only directed to ascertain the amount and proportion of said indebtedness, but "of the interest accrued thereon."

Counsel for the defendant object further to this paragraph because there is no legal ground for directing the ascertainment of interest. The State of West Virginia has not obligated herself in any manner for the payment of interest. The principle is well settled that a State is not liable to pay interest unless it has expressly contracted to do so.

In support of this proposition this court, in United States v. North Carolina, 136 U. S., 211, said:

"A state is not liable to pay interest on its debts, unless its consent to do so has been manifested by an act of its legislature, or by lawful contract of its executive officers."

Following the principle thus announced by this court, many of the State courts have laid down in distinct terms the same proposition. Among the decisions of these courts are the following:

Sawyer v. Colgan, 102 Cal., 293; 36 Pac., 583.
Hawkins v. Mitchell, 34 Fla., 421, 422; 16 So., 316.
Molineux v. State, 109 Cal., 380; 50 Am. St. Rep., 50; 42 Pac., 34.
Flint, etc., R. R. v. Board of State Auditors, 102 Mich., 502; 60 N. W., 971.
Carr v. State, 127 Ind., 204; 22 Am. St. Rep., 624.

In Carr v. Sate, 127 Ind., 204; 22 Am. St. Rep., 624, this principle is announced as one of the points decided:

"A sovereign State is not bound to pay interest unless it has contracted to do so."

The court, in the course of its opinion in this case, says:

"In the case of State ex rel. v. Board, etc., 36 Ohio St., 409, it was held that in the absence of a promise to pay interest none can be recovered against a State, and that a State is not within the provisions of a general statute providing for the payment of interest in cases where money is wrongfully withheld from a creditor. The court put its decision upon the familiar rule that a sovereign is not bound by the words of a statute unless it is expressly named, and in support of its conclusion cited these cases: Trustee, etc., v. Campbell, 16 Ohio St., 11; Joselyn v. Stone, 28 Miss., 753; State v. Kinne, 41 N. H., 238; Attorney-General v. Cape Fear, etc., Co., 2 Ired. Eq., 444; Auditorial Board v. Arles, 15 Tex., 72; State v. Thompson, 10 Ark., 61. In Wightman v. United States, 23 Ct. of Cl., 144, the general rule was stated, and it was said: 'Hence there is no law fixing a rate of interest for all classes of the public debt, and a long-established public policy has been to pay interest only where it is a subject of express agreement or of positive enactment.' It was held in the case of Tillson v. United States, 100 U. S., 43, that a statute referring a claim did not authorize a recovery of interest, in the absence of words expressly providing for the payment of interest. It is impossible to escape the effect of these authorities, and considerations may be readily suggested which increase their force. One is, that there is no right to coerce the payment of a debt due from a sovereign, and, of course, a sovereign may impose limitations upon its liability."

In a note appended to this case as reported in 22 American State Reports, at page 448, we find the following:

"With respect to the obligation of the State to pay interest upon its indebtedness, the principal case is well established by other authorities upon the same subject. In nearly and perhaps all of the States there are statutory provisions providing that moneys, after they become due, shall, in the absence of express contract to the contrary, bear the rate of interest specified in such statutes; but, acting under the old common-law rule that the king or sovereign is not bound by a statute unless expressly named therein, it has been uniformly held that these statutory provisions respecting interest did not apply to any obligation either of the State or of the national government, and therefore that interest is never allowed upon such obligations, in the absence of some special statute clearly manifesting the intention of the sovereign to be bound for the payment of interest upon the particular obligation or class of obligations under consideration (United States v. North Carolina, 136 U. S., 211; State v. Thompson, 10 Ark., 61; State v. Board of Public Works, 36 Ohio St., 409; State v. Bank of Washington, 18 Ark., 554; United States v. Sherman, 98 U. S., 565; United States v. Bayard, 127 U. S., 251; Tillson v. United States, 100 U. S., 43; In re Gosman, 17 Ch. Div., 771; Attorney-General v. Cape Fear N. Co., 2 Ired. Eq., 444; Bledsoe v. State, 64 N. C., 392; Trustee v. Campbell, 16 Ohio St., 11; Joselyn v. Stone, 28 Miss., 753; Wightman v. United States, 23 Ct. of Cls., 144)".

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

OCTOBER TERM, 1907.

IN EQUITY. ORIGINAL, No. 4.

v.

WEST VIRGINIA.

BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF MOTION TO MODIFY DECREE OF REFERENCE.

Paragraph 2 of the decree of reference entered herein on the 4th day of May, 1908, directed the special master to ascertain—

> "2. The extent and value of the territory of Virginia and of West Virginia June 20, 1863, and the population thereof, with and without slaves, separately."

As a substitute for this the defendant proposes the following:

> "2. The territorial area and assessed valuation of the States of Virginia and West Virginia June 20, 1863, and the population thereof, with and without slaves, separately stated, including in the latter State the counties of Berkeley and Jefferson."

We respectfully submit that unless the official assessments of the territory and slaves in both sections of the State are made the basis of the valuation by the master, it will be impossible for him to comply with this part of the decree in a manner satisfactory to the court or the parties. Forty-five years have elapsed since the date fixed in the decree for the valuations, and it is scarcely possible that witnesses can now be produced whose testimony upon the subject will be conclusive or satisfactory. Moreover, the introduction of parol evidence to prove values as they existed forty-five years ago, in a State consisting of more than 60,000 square miles of territory and containing many thousands of slaves, would necessarily prolong the investigation to an unreasonable extent and subject the litigants to a very large and, we think, useless expense. At best, the witnesses could only state their opinions, and upon such a subject they would differ so widely that it would not be possible to reconcile them so as to reach a satisfactory conclusion. The decree provides:

> "All public records published by authority of the Commonwealth of Virginia prior to the 17th day of April, 1861, and all papers and documents and other matter constituting parts of the public files and records of Virginia prior to the date aforesaid, which in the judgment of the master may be relevant and pertinent to any of said inquiries, or copies thereof, if duly authenticated, may be used in evidence and considered by the master, but all such evidence shall be subject to exceptions to its competency. The public acts and records of the two States since the admission of West Virginia into the Union shall be evidence, if pertinent and duly authenticated, but all such evidence tendered by either party shall be subject to proper legal exceptions to its competency."

The authentic official evidence thus provided for in the decree would seem to be sufficient to secure a reasonable degree of accuracy in the valuations ordered to be ascertained by the master without encumbering the record and protracting the investigation by the introduction of unreliable opinions, which must, under the circumstances, be mere guesses.

The assessments are parts of the public records of the State and constituted the basis of taxation in both sections, and their accuracy ought not to be impeached at this late day by the mere opinions of witnesses based upon their recollections of the situation as it then existed. These opinions as to the value of the territory of West Virginia would be largely influenced by the developments of her mineral and other resources and the internal improvements made in that State since 1863, and the testimony would be quite different from what it would have been if it had been taken at that time. It was then known, as is alleged in the bill, and was known when Virginia began to create the debt, that these resources existed, and it is to be presumed that the officials in assessing the value of the land took them into consideration. Most of the land was not arable and was valuable mainly, if not entirely, because of the forests and minerals. It would be manifestly unfair to West Virginia to receive as evidence, for the purpose of increasing the valuations, the mere opinions of witnesses as to the values of gas, coal, iron, and timber separately from the land in which the minerals were deposited or on which the timber was grown, and then add that value to the assessment which already included them. It is stated in the brief filed for Virginia on this motion that these minerals and other resources were not included in the assessments "as distinct subjects of valuation;" but it is said "their presence was considered in estimating the value of land in transactions between vendor and vendee," and that the property was assessed at two-thirds its value. That would be, we suppose, at two-thirds of its market value, including, of course, the minerals and other resources. The same rule of assessment prevailed in both sections of the State, and therefore the relative proportions which the value of property in one section bore to the value in the other would be precisely the same as if it had been assessed at its full market value.

If the assessments are not to govern, what is to be the test of value? It would be impracticable to prove the market value of the land and slaves in 1863, but if assessed values are to be ignored or contradicted, we know of no other test except market value that could be properly applied.

For two years prior to June, 1863, a large part of the territory which now constitutes the State of Virginia was occupied by the two armies, and not only was much valuable property destroyed or carried away, but all values, and especially the values of slave property, were greatly depreciated. The people of West Virginia were not responsible for this condition and they ought not to be prejudiced by it in ascertaining the relative values of the property in the two States at that date.

Paragraphs 3, 4, 5, and 6 read as follows:

> "3. All expenditures made by the Commonwealth of Virginia within the territory now constituting the State of West Virginia since any part of the debt was contracted.
>
> "4. Such proportion of the ordinary expenses of the government of Virginia since any of said debt was contracted, as was properly assignable to the counties which were created into the State of West Virginia on the basis of the average total population of Virginia, with and without slaves, as shown by the census of the United States.
>
> "5. And also on the basis of the fair estimated valuation of the property, real and personal, by counties, of the State of Virginia.
>
> "6. All moneys paid into the treasury of the Commonwealth from the counties included within the State of West Virginia during the period prior to the admission of the latter State into the Union."

The defendant asks that these paragraphs be so modified as to read as follows:

> "3. All expenditures made by the Commonwealth of Virginia within the territory now constituting the State of West Virginia since any part of said debt was contracted, and prior to January 1, 1861.
>
> "4. The ordinary expenses of the government of Virginia since any of said debt was contracted and

prior to January 1, 1861, on the basis of the average total population of Virginia, with and without slaves, as shown by the census of the United States.

"5. And also on the basis of the assessed valuation of the property, real and personal, by counties, of the State of Virginia during the same period.

"6. All moneys paid into the treasury of the Commonwealth from the counties included within the State of West Virginia, during the said period, and prior to January 1, 1861."

Unless some date is fixed by the court at which the investigation shall stop, the master will be required to decide what seems to us some very difficult questions. On the 17th of April, 1861, Virginia passed an ordinance of secession from the Union, and from that time on until long after West Virginia was admitted as a State the two sections were substantially as separate and distinct as they are now. Not long after the passage of the ordinance of secession the restored government of Virginia was organized, composed almost entirely of the counties now constituting the State of West Virginia. These counties paid nearly the whole of the revenue of the restored State until the admission of the new State into the Union. Is West Virginia to be charged in this proceeding with money expended in what is now her territory during that time, and with her just proportion of the ordinary expenses of the government up to June 30, 1863? That was the only recognized government existing in Virginia during that period. We do not suppose it will be claimed that West Virginia is liable for any part of the ordinary expenses of the government at Richmond after the passage of the secession ordinance. To make such a charge against her would be to compel her to contribute to the support of a government in rebellion against the United States. Under the Wheeling ordinance she ought to be charged with money expended in her counties and with her share of the ordinary expenses and credited with money paid into the State treasury during the same period, whatever that period may be; and it should be prescribed by the court, not left to the master.

Most of what we have said concerning paragraph 2 of the decree is also applicable to paragraph 5. It does not appear to us at all practicable to ascertain, by the testimony of witnesses, what was "the fair estimated valuation of the property, real and personal, by counties" forty-five years ago. According to the position taken by counsel for Virginia, the valuation is to be ascertained by considering the oil, gas, iron, coal, and timber separately from the land in or on which they were situated, and then, of course, it would be necessary to ascertain the value of the land separately, without the minerals or timber, in order to secure the entire valuation. This tedious process would have to be adopted in both States, if it was adopted in one, and the investigation would consequently be almost interminable. It is well known that Virginia had vast and valuable deposits of coal and iron and large forests of timber, as well as many other natural resources and advantages which West Virginia did not possess, such as navigable waters, access to tide water, with large bays and fine harbors. Are all these assets to be valued separately also, or did they, like the minerals and timber in West Virginia, affect the value of land and other property of the State and thereby increase the valuation in the official assessments?

The fact that assessments were not made annually, but only once in ten years, is not very material when they are introduced as evidence of values in any intermediate year. The United States census is taken only at the end of each decade, but each decennial census and each decennial assessment shows a certain rate of increase or decrease, as the case may be, since the last one was taken, and it is not difficult, therefore, to calculate with reasonable accuracy what the values are in any particular year. Such evidence is certainly far more reliable than the memories and opinions of witnesses who are called to testify after the lapse of nearly half a century.

In plaintiff's brief on this motion it is said:

"The expenses of the government of the restored State government from June or July, 1861, to June 20, 1863, when the State of West Virginia was created, were all furnished from the funds of the Commonwealth of Virginia, as appears from the acts of the legislature referred to in the progress of this cause. So that the latter date would be the proper one, if any amendment at all is to be made."

On the 19th day of June, 1861, the convention which had assembled at Wheeling on the 8th of June, 1861, adopted an ordinance for the reorganization of the State government, and the restored State government was organized immediately thereafter by the election (by the convention) of a governor and other State officials. Senators were elected to the Congress of the United States on the 9th day of July, 1861, and they were admitted to seats in the Senate on the 13th day of the same month. This government continued until 1867, and it defrayed all its own expenses as long as it existed. As already stated, nearly the whole of its revenue was paid by the counties now composing the State of West Virginia until the admission of that State into the Union; the old Commonwealth of Virginia paid no part of the expenses. It had not only withdrawn protection from the persons and property of the people in West Virginia, but was waging war against them, having, as early as April 24, 1861, seven days after the passage of the ordinance of secession, entered into an agreement with the Confederate States transferring the control of the State to the Confederacy. We are not aware of the existence of any acts of the legislature showing that any part of the expenses of the restored State government was paid "from the funds of the Commonwealth of Virginia," unless the restored government is meant; and if this is the meaning of the statement, the people of West Virginia have paid once for the support of their government and for the protection of their territory and property, without any assistance from the old State, and that State ought not now to have any credit on account of these ordinary expenses.

We respectfully submit that, whatever date may be fixed with respect to the closing of the other accounts in controversy, it is clear that West Virginia should not be charged with any part of the ordinary expenses of the State government after the actual separation and the withdrawal of protection by Virginia in this respect.

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA, DEFENDANT.

ON THE MOTION OF DEFENDANT TO MODIFY THE ORDER OF REFERENCE.

The complainant, by her counsel, respectfully objects to the modifications proposed by the defendant to the order of reference, and for grounds of objection indicates the following, viz:

(1) The order of reference directs the master to ascertain and report:

> "2. The extent and value of the territory of Virginia and of West Virginia June 20, 1863," &c.

The proposed modification of this section is as follows, viz:

> "The territorial area and assessed valuation of the States of Virginia and West Virginia June 20, 1863."

The inquiry should not be restricted to the assessed value of the territory, but should be allowed to embrace every reasonable and proper means of ascertaining the actual value of all of the elements of wealth that together made up the value of the State. When one State is spoken of as wealthier than another, reference is not had to the assessed valuation of the lands, but to all of the resources of the State which are available for producing revenue.

The elements of wealth of West Virginia, even between January, 1861, and June, 1863, were the coal, the oil, the gas, and the hardwoods, which then as now abound throughout its eastern half. These elements of wealth have no place in the assessments for taxation which existed at the dates named. The assessments of land were made in Virginia every ten years. The assessment next preceding January, 1861, and June, 1863, was made in 1856, and manifestly affords no just ground for ascertaining the relative values of the two States as a basis on which the common public debt may justly or equitably be apportioned between these States.

In this connection we may say that there is now before us a copy of the official Report of the Auditor of Virginia, giving in tabulated form exact and full statements of the area and assessed value of each of the counties in the old State, of the lots in each of the cities and towns, and the value of all the personal property within the limits of the State. These tables of statistics, occupying nearly seven hundred pages of closely printed matter, give all the information that can be desired as to the assessed valuation of the real and personal property within the State in the years 1860 and 1861. But this apportionment of the common liability of the two States for the public debt should not and cannot equitably be made on the basis of the assessed values of the property of the States, because the assessed value was not in any case intended to express the actual value. Indeed, it was not intended to be more than two-thirds of the actual value of the property.

The assessment of 1856 did not embrace any of the elements of wealth which since 1861 have formed the principal basis of the wealth of the counties forming the State of West Virginia.

(2) It is proposed to modify the third paragraph of the order of reference by adding to it, at the end, the words "prior to January 1, 1861," the effect of which would be to direct that, even although the Commonwealth of Virginia had expended money within the territory now constituting West Virginia since the first of January, 1861, and prior to June 20, 1863, she should not be credited therewith in this account. Why not?

The "restored State of Virginia" had no existence prior to July, 1861, and then only to a limited extent and for certain purposes; but even that phantasm of a State, although "what seemed its head the likeness of a kingly crown had on," yet in time, when it had served its purpose, it faded back into the name and body of the present Commonwealth of Virginia. So it would seem to be but just that if Virginia had at any time prior to the creation of West Virginia expended money within these western counties, and West Virginia reaped the benefit of it, she should be made to account for it.

(3) The fourth paragraph of the order of reference provides as follows, viz:

> "4. Such proportion of the ordinary expenses of the government of Virginia, since any of the debt was contracted, as was properly assignable to the counties which were created into the State of West Virginia, on the basis of the average to the population of Virginia, with and without slaves, as shown by the census of the United States."

Defendant proposes to modify this as follows, viz:

> "The ordinary expenses of the government of Virginia, since any of said debt was contracted, and

> prior to January 1, 1861, on the basis of the average total population of Virginia, with and without slaves, as shown by the census of the United States."

As stated, the proposed modification, standing alone, is unintelligible. The object of the inquiry is to ascertain what proportion of the ordinary expenses of the State government should be charged to the counties now forming West Virginia.

The expenses of the government of the restored State government from June or July, 1861, to June 20, 1863, when the State of West Virginia was created, were all furnished from the funds of the Commonwealth of Virginia, as appears from the acts of the legislature referred to in the progress of this cause. So that the latter date would be the proper one, if any amendment at all is to be made.

(4) Paragraph 5 of the order of reference is as follows, viz:

> "5. And also on the basis of the fair estimated valuation of the property, real and personal, by counties, of the State of Virginia."

Defendant asks to modify as follows, viz:

> "5. And also on the basis of the assessed valuation of the property, real and personal, by counties, of the State of Virginia during the same period."

We have already called attention to this attempt to restrict the inquiry to the assessed valuation, in commenting upon the proposed modification to paragraph No. 2. The assessed value of real property never exceeded two-thirds of its market value, and, as appears from the Auditor's Report of 1860 and 1861, the assessments of all lands in Virginia were made in 1856, and none later than that date. This assessment did not embrace, as distinct subjects of valuation, coal, or gas, or oil, or hardwoods, which constitute the basis of the large wealth of West Virginia. These all existed in 1861, and their presence was considered in estimating the value of land in transactions between vendor and vendee. Oil was produced in immense quantities in 1862, and was prepared for market at the town of Elizabeth, in West Virginia, in that year. These elements of wealth and value would have been taken into account in any proceeding for partition between joint owners, but were not considered in assessment for taxation.

From 1861 to 1865 West Virginia was the seat of war; few, if any, actual transactions of sale of lands took place, and no normal standard of valuation existed. The difficulties are great enough in the way of reaching the actual values of land in that State during that period without adding the inequitable standard of assessment for taxation.

(5) Paragraph 6 of the order of reference provides as follows, viz:

> "6. All moneys paid into the treasury of the Commonwealth from the counties included within the State of West Virginia during the period prior to the admission of the latter State into the Union."

The defendant proposes to modify this section as follows, viz:

> "6. All moneys paid into the treasury of the Commonwealth from the counties included within the State of West Virginia during the said period and prior to January 1, 1861."

That is, the defendant wishes to limit the period within which the Commonwealth should be charged with moneys received from the western counties to the 1st of January, 1861, while the court would extend that period to June 20, 1863. As we do not think that either date will make any difference in the account, we leave this matter to the court.

Defendant, in proposing the names of gentlemen from which a selection may be made by the court of a special master to state the account in this cause, has found it needful to advise the court that it has deemed it right not to consider any citizen of centers where "West Virginia certificates" are owned, or sold, or traded in, and then it proceeds to nominate Mr. Charles E. Littlefield, of Maine.

We state for the information of the court that one of the largest certificate-holders who has made himself known to us during this litigation is a good citizen of the State of Maine. The two gentlemen named by defendant are altogether unimpeachable personally. We would not have nominated them because Mr. Littlefield lives so far away from the counsel and from the records from which all the information required is to be had, and because Mr. John W. Yerkes is at present a member of the firm of Hamilton, Yerkes & Colbert, who are the counsel for the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Co., which is the largest taxpayer in West Virginia, contributing, as we are advised, one-eleventh of the taxes paid into the treasury. It has, therefore, a large interest in reducing the burdens which may rest upon that State and thereby lead to an increase of taxation.

On behalf of the Commonwealth of Virginia, we announced to counsel for West Virginia our purpose to present to the court the name of Mr. John Prentiss Poe, of the city of Baltimore, but were informed by them that Mr. Poe was counsel in a chancery cause of Maryland v. West Virginia, pending in this court, and was on that account ineligible. In this we concurred at the moment, but have since learned from unquestionable sources that Mr. Poe did file such a bill in his official character of Attorney General of Maryland, but that since the expiration of his term of office, now many years ago, he has been in nowise concerned in the cause. We therefore add his name to those already presented, and say that Mr. Poe is a graduate of Princeton, some time a bank clerk, and since 1858 a lawyer of recognized standing in the courts of Maryland and its neighboring States, and for many years a counsellor on the rolls of this court. He is the author of the standard works of Law and Equity Practice in Maryland and was some time the Attorney General of that State.

WEST VIRGINIA, DEFENDANT.

To the Chief Justice and the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States:

On behalf of the Commonwealth of Virginia, the undersigned beg to nominate as suitable persons from whom a selection may be made by the court of one to be appointed "special master" to ascertain and report on the several subjects indicated in the order of the court of the day of May, 1908, the following named gentlemen, viz:

Mr. J. J. DARLINGTON, of the District of Columbia;

Mr. GEORGE WHARTON PEPPER, of the city of Philadelphia.

Apart from the qualification of personal fitness, the residence of the master is regarded as a feature entitled to great consideration. He should be in a locality easily accessible to the counsel in the cause, and especially should he be where he could have easy and frequent access to the public records of Virginia, in the city of Richmond, from which nearly all the facts on which the inquiries he will be charged with conducting are to be found.

WILLIAM A. ANDERSON,
Attorney General of Virginia.

I cordially concur in the above nominations.

DECREE REFERRING THE CAUSE TO A MASTER.

This cause coming on this day to be heard upon the complainant's bill and the exhibits filed therewith, the answer of the defendant, with the exhibits filed therewith, and the general replication filed by the complainant thereto, was argued by counsel. On consideration whereof it is adjudged, ordered, and decreed that this cause be referred to

, who is hereby appointed a special master herein, who, after giving not less than ten days' notice to the parties of the times and places fixed by him, from time to time, for executing this decree, will without delay ascertain and report to the court:

...

I.

The amount of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia as of the first day of January, 1861, stating specifically, how and in what form the same was evidenced, by what authority of law and for what purposes the same was created, and the dates and nature of the bonds or other evidences of said indebtedness.

II.

What amount and proportion of said indebtedness and of the interest accrued thereon should in equity be apportioned to and be now paid by the State of West Virginia.

III.

He will make and return with his report any special or alternative statements of the accounts between the complainant and the defendant in the premises which either may desire him to state or which he may deem to be desirable to present to the court.

It is further adjudged, ordered, and decreed as follows:

(1) To the end that full and complete information may be afforded the master as to all matters involved in the inquiries with which he is charged by this decree, the Commonwealth of Virginia and the State of West Virginia shall each of them respectively produce before the master, or give him access to, all such records, books, papers, and public documents as may be in their possession or under their control and which may, in his judgment, be pertinent to the said inquiries and accounts or any of them.

And the master is authorized to visit the capitals of Virginia and West Virginia, and to make or cause to be made

(Substitute for paragraph II of the decree asked for by the complainant.)

II.

What is the just amount and proportion of said debt, including the interest thereon, which should now be apportioned to, and paid by, the State of West Virginia? Such amount and porportion of said debt the master will ascertain by charging against West Virginia:

(1) All expenditures made by the State of Virginia within the territory which now constitutes the State of West Virginia since any part of said debt was contracted.

(2) Such proportion of the ordinary expenses of the government of Virginia since any part of said debt was contracted as was fairly assignable to the counties which were erected into the State of West Virginia.

In ascertaining this, the master will take as the basis or criterion upon which the apportionment of said expenses shall be made the average total population of Virginia, excluding slaves, as nearly as the same can be determined from the United States Census for each of the decades in which such expenses were incurred and paid.

(3) The amount and value of all money, property, stocks, and credits which West Virginia received from the Commonwealth of Virginia, not embraced in any of the preceding items and not including any property, stocks, or credits which were obtained or acquired by said Commonwealth after the 19th day of June, 1861, the date of the organization of the restored government of Virginia.

(5) From the aggregate of the amounts thus ascertained, the master will deduct all moneys paid into the treasury of said Commonwealth from the counties included within the the State of West Virginia during said period.

(6) The balance thus ascertained, with interest thereon from the 1st day of January, 1861, until the same shall be paid, will be the amount and proportion of the debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia existing before that date, assignable to West Virginia and which that State should pay.

such examinations as he may deem desirable of the books of account, documents, and public records of either State relating to the inquiries he is directed to make, and to cause copies thereof or extracts therefrom to be made for use in making up his report.

All published records published by authority of the Commonwealth of Virginia prior to the creation of the State of West Virginia and all papers and documents and other matter constituting parts of the public files and records of Virginia prior to the partition of her territory which, in the judgment of the master, may be relevant and pertinent to any of said inquiries, or copies thereof, if duly authenticated, may be used in evidence and considered by the master. The public acts and records of the two States since the creation of the State of West Virginia shall be evidence if pertinent and duly authenticated; but all such testimony tendered by either party shall be subject to proper legal exception as to its competency.

The master is empowered to summon any persons whose testimony he or either party may deem to be material, and to cause their depositions to be taken before him or by a notary public or other officer authorized to take the same, after reasonable notice to the adverse party.

(2) The master is authorized and empowered to employ such accountants, stenographers, or other clerical assistance as he may find it desirable to employ, and to secure such rooms or offices as he may require, in order to the prompt and efficient execution of this order of reference, and to agree with such accountants and stenographers, typewriters, and the owner of such room or rooms for such compensation to be made to them as the master may consider reasonable and just. He is authorized to direct their compensation to be paid out of the funds to be deposited to the credit of this cause.

(3) The complainant will cause the sum of three thousand dollars to be deposited with the marshal of this court to the credit of this cause, on account of the costs and expenses of executing this decree and of this suit, and the complainant will cause such farther sums as may be necessary to defray the costs and expenses of executing this decree to be from time to time in like manner deposited with said marshal. In the event that the defendant shall desire any special statement or accounts to be made, she shall in like manner, before the taking of any such account or the making of such special statement, cause the sum of dollars to be deposited with the marshal.

And the master is authorized from time to time to draw upon the funds so deposited by Virginia for the compensation of the accountants and other clerical assistants whom he may employ, and for any other costs or expenses, including stationery, printing, and room rent, which it may in his judgment be necessary to be incurred in promptly and efficiently executing this order of reference or making up any special statement or accounts asked for by the plaintiff, and the same will be charged up as part of the complainant's costs; and he will draw upon the fund deposited by the defendant for any costs which may be incurred in making up any special statement or accounts which may be desired by the defendant to be specially stated, which drafts, accompanied by proper vouchers, the marshal of this court will pay, and the same will be charged up as part of the defendant's costs in the cause.

And the said marshal is allowed to have and retain a commission of five per centum for his services in receiving and disbursing the funds so deposited with him, and he will make a report of his transactions, receipts, and disbursements in the premises to the court.

IV.

The first notice of the time and place fixed by the master for beginning the taking of the accounts directed by this decree shall be given at least thirty days before the date fixed by him therefor, provided that the date so fixed by the master for beginning the taking of said accounts shall not be a day earlier than February 20, 1907. The master may adjourn his sittings from time to time and place to place without notice to the parties. He will cause to be kept, in a minute book to be provided for the purpose, a journal or minutes of his sittings in the execution of this decree, showing the counsel present, if any, any adjournments which may be taken by him from time to time or place to place, and any other matters which the master may deem it proper to mention therein, which minute book or journal he will return with his report.

V.

Any notices to be given in connection with the execution of this decree may be given to the Attorneys-General of the respective States.

RICHMOND, VIRGINIA, December 7, 1907.

To Hon. CLARKE W. MAY,
Attorney-General of West Virginia:

Please take notice that on the meeting of the court on Tuesday, the seventeenth instant, we will move the Supreme Court of the United States to enter in the above-entitled cause the decree of which the above is a copy.

COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA,
Complainant,

v.

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA.

I, CHARLES E. LITTLEFIELD, SPECIAL MASTER APPOINTED UNDER AN ORDER MADE IN THE FOREGOING CASE, RESPECTFULLY SUBMIT THE FOLLOWING REPORT:

PARAGRAPH 1 OF DECREE.

1. THE AMOUNT OF THE PUBLIC DEBT OF THE COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA ON THE FIRST DAY OF JANUARY, 1861, STATING SPECIFICALLY HOW AND IN WHAT FORM THE SAME WAS EVIDENCED, BY WHAT AUTHORITY OF LAW AND FOR WHAT PURPOSES THE SAME WAS CREATED, AND THE DATES AND NATURE OF THE BONDS OR OTHER EVIDENCE OF SAID INDEBTEDNESS.

The parties agree to the extent of $32,919,863.93 upon the amount of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia on the 1st day of January, 1861 (Rec., p. 215). The plaintiff claimed at the time of making the joint schedule A-1, p. 1, that there should be added to this aggregate:

First—
Unpaid and accrued interest from July 1st, 1860, to December 31, 1860, on the public debt.....		$ 977,209.89
Second—
Bonds of the Commonwealth of Virginia, held by the Sinking Fund $1,329,557.20
Unpaid and accrued interest as above..	39,686.72
Total		1,369,243.92
Bonds of the Commonwealth held by the Board of Public Works .....$ 146,500.00
Unpaid and accrued interest as above..	4,395.00
Total		150,895.00
Bonds of the Commonwealth held by the Literary Fund.. 1,085,067.33
Unpaid and accrued interest as above..	31,776.02
Total		1,116,843.35

(Rec., p. 215.)

These items were all in the first instance contested by the defendant. The item of $977,209.89, unpaid and accrued interest, is conceded by the defendant and I treat it as a part of the public debt.

It is conceded that the bonds held by the Board of Public Works were bonds of the Commonwealth placed in its hands for sale in connection with the prosecution of the works under its charge, but that the bonds referred to were never issued, and therefore never became a part of the public debt. For this reason this item has been withdrawn by the plaintiff.

There remains in controversy the bonds in the Sinking Fund and the Literary Fund. Whether the bonds of the State held by these two funds are within the meaning of the Decree, a part of "the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia" is the question. This involves a review of the constitutional and statutory provisions creating them.

Sinking Fund.

The Constitution of Virginia required the maintenance of a Sinking Fund to > "be applied to the payment of the interest of the State debt and the principal of such part as may be redeemable. If no part be redeemable, then the residue of the Sinking Fund, after the payment of such interest, shall be invested in the bonds or certificates of debt of this Commonwealth or of the United States or of some of the states of this Union, and applied to the payment of the state debt as it shall become redeemable."

> (Con. Va. Art. 4, Sec. 29, p. 47.)

The sum necessary was to "be set apart annually from the accruing revenues." (Con. Va., Art. IV., Sec. 29; Code Va. 1860, p. 47.) Proceeds of the "sale of the stocks held by the Commonwealth for internal improvement and other companies, if made before the payment of the public debt" were to "constitute a part of the Sinking Fund" (do. Sec. 30). The "Auditor of Public Accounts, Register and Secretary of the Commonwealth for the time being" were constituted a "corporate body under the style of 'The Commissioners of the Sinking Fund.' * * * For the purpose of managing, preserving and applying the Sinking Fund created by this Act." (Code of Va. 1860, Chap. 44, sec. 6, p. 261.) The Auditor of Public Accounts was required, "to pay into the Treasury of the Commonwealth [not the Treasury of the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund] annually thereafter out of the accruing revenues" the specified "portion of the sum set apart for the Sinking Fund". He was also required to "pay into the Treasury to the credit of said Fund" the amount of the semi-annual interest. (do. Chap. 44, sec. 4, p. 260). To provide for subsequent debts, he was also required to "pay in like manner into the Treasury", that is, of the Commonwealth, "to the credit of the Sinking Fund, one per centum, &c." and also "in like manner into the Treasury to the credit of the said fund * * * the amount of the semi-annual interest", and in case of coupon bonds, the "amount of the interest" was to be "set apart and paid into the Treasury to the credit of said fund" thirty days in advance of their becoming due. (do. Chap. 44, sec. 5, p. 261.) It was "their duty to apply the moneys appropriated out of the said Fund to the payment of the interest and redemption of the principal of the State debt," &c., and to "invest any part of the appropriations * * * which cannot be so applied to the purchase of public stock" (do. Sec. 7, p. 261). Instalments of interest and sums for the redemption of any part of the principal of the debt were to be paid by special order of the Commissioners entered on their minutes authorizing "the second auditor to issue his warrants on the treasury". (do. Sec. 10, p. 261.) The second auditor was required to "keep the accounts of the Sinking Fund with the Treasury in such manner as to show distinctly at all times the amount of the transactions on account of each appropriate head of receipts and expenditures," (do. Sec. 13, p. 262).

> "All moneys belonging to the Sinking Fund shall be paid into the Treasury on the warrant of the second auditor and shall be paid out in like manner when authorized by the Commissioners of said Fund" (do. sec. 14, p. 262).
>
> "The Treasurer [State Treasurer], shall receive and pay the moneys belonging to the Sinking Fund as herein required. He shall keep a distinct account of the same and report to each session of the Legislature the aggregate receipts and disbursements on account thereof * * *" (do. sec. 15, p. 262).

The Treasurer of the Commonwealth was required to > "keep separate accounts of the money belonging to the Literary Fund, to the Fund for Internal Improvement, to the Sinking Fund and to the Washington Monument Fund, showing the receipts and disbursements on account of each" (Chap. 45, Sec. 31, p. 270).

Semi-annual interest on the debt of 1839 was to "be paid out of the Public Treasury" but no part of it "out of the Sinking Fund," thus recognizing the Sinking Fund as being in the Public Treasury (Chap. 44, Sec. 19, p. 263).

LITERARY FUND.

By an Act passed March 3, 1819 (Rev. Code of Va., 1819, Vol. 1, page 82), certain public officials were > "constituted a body corporate and politic under the denomination of the President and Directors of the Literary Fund, with power to sue and be sued, plead and be impleaded, and to hold lands and tenements, goods and chattels, and the same to sell, dispose of or improve for the purposes hereafter mentioned" (Chap. 33, Sec. 6).

and

> "All sums of money which have accrued or may hereafter accrue to the Literary Fund in consequence of the appropriations thereto already, now or hereafter to be made," were vested in said persons (do., Sec. 6).

Actions were authorized to be brought "in the name of the said President and Directors" (do. sec. 7), and in an Act consisting of 22 sections an elaborate plan for the management of the Literary Fund was prescribed.

March 2, 1821, "An Act concerning the Literary Fund" was passed (Acts of Va., 1820-1821, p. 12). It repealed "all acts and parts of acts coming within the purview of this Act," (Sec. 13, p. 14). It changed the personnel of the Board (Sec. 1). It did not vest in them the money which was vested in the original board. It provided "that all moneys accruing for the benefit of the Literary Fund" should "be paid into the public treasury and shall be kept by the Treasurer of the Commonwealth ex officio in the same manner that other public moneys are kept by him except only that there shall be a separate account raised therefor in the name and for the benefit of the Literary Fund" and that it should only "be checked or drawn for in his official capacity as such Treasurer" (Sec. 3, p. 13). The State Treasurer was to "be accountable for the moneys so paid into the Treasury" (Sec. 4). Dividends and interest upon stock belonging to the Fund and interest on moneys loaned were to be "paid into the Treasury" (Sec. 5). Sheriffs collecting executions were "to pay the same into the Treasury" (Sec. 6). "Money belonging to the Literary Fund" could "be paid out of the treasury" only on a "warrant from the auditor drawn in pursuance of an order of the president and directors" (Sec. 7). An accountant was provided for who was required,

> "to keep distinct accounts of all the stock and other property belonging to the Literary Fund and distinct accounts of all monies authorized to be paid into the Treasury and to be drawn therefrom on account of said Fund."

And he was to be furnished by the auditor with > "statements of all warrants for the payment of money into the Treasury for the benefit of the Literary Fund" (Sec. 11, p. 14).

"An Act to amend the several Acts concerning the Literary Fund" passed February 25, 1829 Acts of Va. 1828-9, page 13), provided for a detailed plan for the supervision of the Fund, and Section 13, vested in the second auditor, "The Superintendent of the Literary Fund, all the power heretofore vested in the president and directors of the Literary Fund," with certain exceptions not material, and created a board with certain supervising powers "to perpetuate the corporation heretofore established."

Referring to this corporation the Code of 1860, page 414, provides:

> "The Governor, Treasurer, two auditors and register of the land office shall be a corporation under the style of 'The Board of the Literary Fund'" and be vested with all the rights and powers here tofore vested in the President and Directors of the Literary Fund (Chap. 78, sec. 1). There is no provision in the Code vesting this "corporation" with any title to the funds or property of the Literary Fund. "Any money which ought to be paid into the public Treasury to the credit of the Literary Fund" is to be recovered not by the Board but by the second auditor of the Treasury (do. Chap. 78, sec. 7—Chap. 72, sec. 1). The Board is authorized to > "invest all the unappropriated capital and income of the Literary Fund in certificates of debt of the United States or certificates of debt of or guaranteed by this State or in stocks of banks incorporated by it" (do. sec. 8, p. 414).

It is provided that

> "All money belonging to the Literary Fund shall be received into and paid out of the Public Treasury upon the warrant of the second auditor."

The only control that the Board has over this fund is by virtue of a provision that,

> "no warrant for paying out such money shall be issued without the special authority of the Board" (do., sec. 13, p. 415).

The second auditor adjusts, settles and balances all accounts of persons "having accounts with the Literary Fund" (do. Sec. 14, p. 415). The board does not have the right to the possession of "securities for money belonging to the Literary Fund," as all such securities are to be deposited "with the second auditor for safe keeping" (do. sec. 15, p. 415).

"Money, stocks or other property" are all referred to as belonging "to the Literary Fund" undoubtedly for convenience and identification. (Code Va. 1860, Chap. 79, sec. 1, p. 416.) As the money belonging to this Fund is in the Treasury of the Commonwealth as a part of its common assets kept in "a separate and distinct account," "the money, stocks or other property" would seem for the same reason to be the property of the State in the "Literary Fund."

The Courts of Virginia in a recent case have authoritatively construed legislation of a similar character relating to the Eastern State Hospital, which in its character is more indicative of constituting the Board in question a separate legal entity or a corporation independent of the State than is the legislation relating to the Sinking Fund or the Literary Fund.

By an Act passed March 6, 1841 (Acts of Va. 1840-1841, Chap. 15, page 38), the > "present Directors of the Hospital in the City of Williamsburg" were constituted

> "a body politic and corporate to have perpetual succession by the name of the 'Directors of the Eastern Asylum for the maintenance and cure of insane persons' and by that name may sue and be sued and may and shall have and use a common seal and are enabled to take and hold any estate real or personal given or to be given to the said Asylum or to themselves for the use thereof" (do. sec. 1).

By the Code of Virginia, 1860, Chap. 85, sec. 2, page 435, it is provided that the first being known as the "Eastern Lunatic Asylum."

> "The directors for the Asylums at Williamsburg and Staunton shall respectively continue to be corporations,"

The name of the hospital at Williamsburg was changed to the "Eastern State Hospital" and it was provided that its directors should continue to be a corporation (Va. Code, annotated, Sec. 1661). Neither of the Codes appear to have changed the powers vested in the corporation. The directors of this hospital are provided for by the Constitution (Art. XI, Sec. 149-150, p. 248). The Board has the "management of the Hospital for which it is appointed" (sec. 1662). Its funds are to be deposited in a "solvent bank" designated by the Board and Commissioners (sec. 1665). Unlike the Sinking and Literary Fund its funds are not to be deposited in the State Treasury. They are "disbursed by checks drawn by the Superintendent of the Hospital and approved and countersigned by the Chairman of said special board" (sec. 1666). This separates the fund of the Hospital from the general fund of the State and the Treasury of the State. The directors have power to release claims for the "removal, maintenance or care of an insane person" (sec. 1708). In addition to the general corporate right to sue originally granted to the board, it has the right to sue "in the name of the hospital or of the Commonwealth" (sec. 1709).

While in this Code the State Treasurer is required to keep separate accounts of the money belonging to the Literary Fund, Interest on the Public Debt and the Sinking Fund, and the Miller Fund, the Hospital Fund is not recognized as being in his hands and he is not required to keep any account thereof (sec. 781).

Eastern State Hospital v. Graves, 105 Va. 151, was a suit brought by the hospital to recover sums due for board and medical services and the question was whether the Statute of Limitations could be pleaded in the suit, it being contended on the part of the plaintiff that the hospital was in effect the State and the Statute of Limitations did not run against the State, and therefore it could not be pleaded; and in holding that the Statute of Limitations could not be pleaded, the Court said that the > "hospital was created and exists for purely Governmental purposes—is a public corpora> tion, governed and controlled by the State and acts exclusively as an agency of the State * * * that it has no stockholders, no members even except directors having no interest in it or its affairs, who are appointed by the Governor and with the consent of the Senate and are in fact public, rather than corporate officials endued with corporate being for a more convenient administration of the duties imposed upon them by law * * * if not collected the loss falls wholly upon the State, and if there is a recovery it will be for the benefit of the State and the State alone—not for the benefit of the directors nor for the benefit of any subordinate division of the State but for the whole people—the State at large" (p. 153).

The same doctrine in substance had been previously announced in Maia v. Eastern State Hospital, 97 Va., 507. The case of Eastern State Hospital v. Graves, expressly overrules the case of McClanahan v. Western Lunatic Asylum, 88 Va., 466, which holds that a plea of the Statute of Limitations was good on the ground that the asylum > "is a corporation—an authorized legal entity —a personality in law with power to sue and be sued" (p. 468),

The McClanahan case seemed to turn almost wholly upon the fact that the Asylum had the power to sue and be sued. It is not only expressly overruled on that point by Eastern State Hospital v. Graves, but inasmuch as neither the Commissioners of the "Sinking Fund" or the "Literary Fund" have the power to sue and be sued, it would not be in point as to those funds in establishing that the respective boards were organized legal entities and personalities in law as distinguished from mere public agencies. This construction given to a state statute by the Supreme Court of Virginia having now become the well settled law of Virginia, will be held to be the authoritative construction of that statute by the Federal Courts as no Federal question is involved.

> Soper v. Lawrence Bros., 201 U. S., 359-370.
> N. Y. Cent. R. R. Co. v. Miller, 202 U. S., 584, 595.

On the authority of that case and by reason of the fact that they have neither stockholders or assets or control over assets and its officers are public, rather than corporate officials, invested with corporate capacity for convenient administration, and the funds are kept in the State Treasury subject to the control of its Treasurer, he being responsible therefor, in separate and distinct accounts for the purpose of convenience in maintaining the identity of and keeping the accounts of its Treasurer with each, I find that these funds are the property of the State.

Bonds purchased by and for either of these funds were bonds purchased by and for and on account of and with the funds of and became the property of the Commonwealth of Virginia, kept for convenience in the accounts to which they respectively belonged.

The remaining question is what was the legal effect upon the "public debt" of Virginia of the purchase of its bonds for each of these funds by the Commonwealth itself.

The plaintiff contends that they have remained after such purchase in the respective funds a part of the "public debt" of the State.

My attention has been called to the case of State ex rel. Heller v. Young, 18 Wash., 21, as sustaining the contention of the plaintiff. In that case the Court held that under an Act authorizing the State Treasurer "to invest all money now in his hands * * * belonging to the Tide Land Fund * * * in the general fund warrants of the state" (p. 23) that the authority conferred was "to purchase and not to pay" (p. 25) the general fund warrants. In the majority opinion the case turned upon the question as to whether the act contemplated "the payment and extinguishment of the warrants" or only authorized "the purchase for the benefit of the tide land fund of such warrants" (p. 24). Three of the Court held that the act contemplated a purchase and that the State could not compel the holder of a warrant to sell it to the State, the case seeming to turn largely upon the question of the power to compel the holder of a warrant to sell it to the State. While inferentially the reasoning indicates the continued existence of the warrant as a part of the debt of the State, its character in that respect is not discussed in the opinion. Two of the Court dissent and Chief Justice Scott in his dissenting opinion says:

> "It is immaterial whether the transaction contemplated an investment, a payment or a purchase. By it the State would become the holder of its own paper to a considerable amount. The original holder would be paid for it would undoubtedly be a payment to him. It might still be an investment upon the part of the State for the benefit of a particular fund. This could make no difference with the prior holder. The warrants would be in effect discharged, for they could not be reissued without express legislative > authority reviving them and directing it. The State might preserve them as evidence of the amounts due a particular fund, which it might at some time desire to replace. * * * The word 'invest' was probably used through a desire to preserve the particular fund as a distinctive one, but these questions are not in this case and do not concern the relator in any way" (p. 32).

thus indicating clearly that the legal effect of the transaction as to whether it did or did not affect the character of the warrant as a continuing indebtedness was not involved in the case, and also clearly indicating that in the opinion of the Chief Justice the purchase of a warrant under such circumstances extinguished it as an indebtedness of the State.

The case of State ex rel. Stull Bros. vs. Bartley, 41 Nebr., 277, is cited by the majority in State v. Young. In that case the Court held that the Constitution had created a trust fund known as the Permanent School Fund, and that an Act providing for the payment of a warrant drawn on the general fund by the Treasurer and also that the Treasurer "shall hold said warrant as an investment of said permanent school fund" was void, as "said Act provides in substance for a transfer to the general fund of the permanent school fund" (p. 283). In the opinion the Court said:

> "We shall not argue to prove that an Act which provides for the defraying of current expenses of the State, and the enforced payment of outstanding general fund warrants from the permanent school fund is a transfer of that fund. The fact that such a transaction is by the legislature denominated an investment is wholly immaterial" (p. 284).

In defining "investment" they said:

> "It implies the contractural relation of purchaser and seller or borrower and lender, and in that sense it is employed in the Constitution" (p. 284), undoubtedly having in mind the relation between the State and the holder of the warrant proposed to be credited by the Act rather than the specific relation of the State itself to its own warrant thus purchased, as they immediately proceed to say:

> "It follows that the State in its relation as Trustee can no more require the holder of State warrants to part with them than it can enforce the sale by a citizen of any other species of property" (p. 284).

While the case is not put upon that ground, it seems to involve the necessary conclusion that the warrants as "State securities" ceased to exist after such payment and although denominated an "investment," by the Act they were not after such purchase a debt or liability of the State, as if they were the "permanent school fund" would still have existed untransferred but invested in the warrants.

In In re State Warrants, 25 Nebr., 659, the Court held that "State warrants drawing interest" were "State securities" within the meaning of the Constitutional provision, authorizing the investment of the school funds in "United States or State Securities" but did not discuss the question as to what the effect of such a purchase would be upon such warrants as a continuing indebtedness of the State.

In State v. Stuefer, 66 Nebr., 381, the opinion of the Commissioner, who was appointed by the Court, seems to treat the proceeding contemplated by the Statute being construed by the Court in In re State Warrants (supra), as a guarantee by the State of the integrity and security of the "permanent school fund," and did not discuss the question as to the effect upon a State security, as a continuing indebtedness after its purchase by the State.

These cases, while in some respects analogous, are not in point upon the contention of the plaintiff.

In Commissioners v. Walker, 7 Miss. (6. How), 143, upon the ground that "There was a legal conveyance of the Sinking Fund to persons capable of holding it for the use and benefit of the State in the extinguishment of a certain debt" (p. 187); the Court held that the Commissioners were Trustees of the Sinking Fund; and as such could maintain the suit to recover money loaned by them from the Sinking Fund "for the use of the party beneficially interested" (p. 188); and did not discuss the question involved here.

The case of Elser v. City of Fort Worth, 27 S. W., 739, is closely in point for the plaintiff. In that case the Court said:

> "The next contention of appellant is that if the City can invest these funds otherwise than in paying off and canceling the bonds themselves it cannot invest them in the purchase of its own outstanding bonds of another series because a purchase by a debtor of a debt against himself ipso facto works a cancellation thereof. It must be conceded that this is a correct statement of the law in its application to ordinary cases in which the purchase is made by the debtor in the same capacity in which he owes the debt; * * *

But, be this as it may, it will hardly be contended that if the purchase be made in a different capacity than that in which the debt is owed (for instance, if A as Trustee should with a trust fund purchase a debt which he owes as an individual), the rule would apply; and we are of opinion that as to those funds set apart for special purposes both by the law and the ordinances passed by the City Council as in this case, the City must be regarded as a Trustee purchasing with the trust fund a debt which it owes as an individual and that the debt so purchased is not canceled but is kept alive for all purposes and becomes the property of the cestui que trust—the special fund—just as the house and lot taken from a defaulting collector was said by our Supreme Court in the case of City of Sherman v. Williams, 84 Tex., 421, 19 S. W. 606, to become the property of such a fund. We think this view receives striking illustration in numerous provisions of our constitution and laws authorizing the investment of special funds such as the university and public school funds held by the State in its own bonds and by the different counties in their own obligations. We believe it has never been contended that a purchase of this kind cancelled the bonds thus acquired" (p. 740).

The Court distinguishes 102 N. Y., 313, and 102 N. Y., 410, upon the ground that they turn upon statutes "quite dissimilar to the provisions contained in the Charter of this City." The Charter provided:

"The City Council shall have power to invest the sinking fund * * * in bonds of the City of Fort Worth" (p. 741).

An examination of the essential and substantial features of the legislation construed in the New York cases will, I think, show their substantial identity with this provision in the Charter of the City of Fort Worth. The opinion of the Court seems to be mainly predicated upon the analogy of the collector's house and proceeds upon an apparent misconception of the legal situation. The house had physical existence and could be impressed with a trust in connection with the fund without any reference to its ownership or any contractual relations to or interests therein. There is no parallel between such a piece of physical property and the bonds in question. A bond is merely the evidence of an indebtedness and entitles the holder to recover of the maker the amount evidenced by its terms. Independent of establishing the right of such recovery the bond has no value. To assume that it is in all respects parallel to a piece of physical property for the purpose of demonstrating that it still has valid existence as an evidence of indebtedness after its purchase by the maker, is to beg the question and assume its continued existence as a debt. The bond is a promise to pay and the real question is whether the obligation which the City assumed to pay, the sum stipulated in the bond, to the payee, still remains an obligation when the City makes the purchase itself and becomes by virtue thereof the other party to the contract. On the theory of a trust relied on by the Court the debt may well have been extinguished, as a debt, and the proceeds in the hands of the City be impressed with a trust in favor of the fund in which the debt had merged.

This was a decision of an intermediate Court. It does not appear to have gone to the Supreme Court, and I do not find that it has ever been cited with approval.

There are a number of authorities which clearly sustain the contention of the defendants, some of which are directly in point.

In Young v. Hughes, 20 Miss. (12 S. & M.), 93, the State subscribed for stock in the Planter's Bank and paid for the subscription in bonds and provided that the surplus of the dividends on the stock after the payment of the interest of the bonds was to "constitute a Sinking Fund * * * for the redemption of the said bonds" (p. 96) and a State Commissioner was afterwards provided for with power to "manage, collect and receive the Sinking Fund" (p. 98) and authorized to coerce by suit or otherwise payments of all debts due that fund. The fund was held to be the property of the State.

In Miss. v. Dickinson, 20 Miss. (12 S. & M.), 579, the State Treasurer was required to set off the indebtedness of the State to the defendant against the amount the defendant owed the Sinking Fund, notwithstanding the fact that the Sinking Fund was in a sense a trust fund because "an indebtedness to the sinking fund is therefore, an indebtedness to the State of Mississippi, the latter being the sole owner of that fund" (p. 583).

In Comr. of Baltimore Co. vs. Board of Managers of the Maryland Hospital for the Insane, 62 Md. 127, the Board of Managers of the Hospital held the title by deed of "all the real estate and other property belonging to said trust" (p. 130). They were "a body politic and corporate" might "sue and be sued" (p. 131). They had no "power to mortgage or pledge any of the property real or personal of said hospital" (p. 130). The hospital was "declared to have been built and established on its said site by the authority and direction of this State" and the hospital was "to be a public agency of this State for the administration of one of the charities thereof" (p. 131). The Court held that the hospital was the property of the State and not subject to an assessment for the construction of a public roadway and that the "corporate form was adopted by the State only more conveniently and efficiently to administer the affairs of the Institution" (p. 132).

In New England Life Ins Co. v. Phillips, 141 Mass., 535, the Court was deciding the effect of a purchase by trustees of a Sinking Fund, of railroad bonds, which the fund was created to buy, and under the provisions of the Statute they held that it was the duty of the Trustees to cancel the certificates of the road's indebtedness when purchased by them with the Sinking Fund. They said,

> "Now if it were a plain misuse of the term to say 'invested' when preservation for the purpose of collecting income is not intended, there would be some force in the argument. But the word 'invest' has no such absolute and universal meaning. It is not uncommon to hear it said that the best investment of money is in the payment of one's debts" (p. 540).
> "but as has already been seen the word 'invest' does not necessarily imply a permanent keeping for income (p. 543). * * * But in the view which we take of the proper construction of the Statute it might reasonably be anticipated that the Trustees though having the liberty to invest in other securities would give the preference to the certificates of indebtedness if these could be obtained at a fair price as compared with the other authorized securites for the purpose of reducing the debt as fast as possible" (p. 544).

While the point is not emphasized, this last remark of the Court indicates that it understood the purchase of securities under such circumstances to result in a reduction of the debt.

In Brooke et al. v. Phila. 162 Pa. St., 123, 24 L. R. A., 781, in considering the debt limit fixed by the Constitution and the relation thereto of the bonds of the city held in its Sinking Fund, the Court said:

"When used in the purchase of the debt, there is a release of the pledge and a discharge of the obligation to the amount of the purchase.

It is not important in determining the actual debt that the Commissioners have not authority immediately on purchase to cancel or destroy the city certificate; it is paid for by the money of the obligor; put into the fund for that very purpose; as an outstanding unpaid obligation, it can as to the obligor have no real effective existence after it is purchased and paid for with the city's money" (p. 131). * * * It "ceases to be longer a part of the actual debt of the city. That much of the debt the City is no longer bound to pay because practically it is paid. We are speaking now of the actual obligation of the city as affected by these certificates in the fund but not yet canceled" (p. 131) * * * "The City owes now just what it is bound to pay; not one cent more. If it has through the Sinking Fund purchased its own certificates, placed them uncancelled in the fund and even pays interest on them annually it can- not pay them again. The payment of annual interest is only a method or device for the annual appropriation to the fund" (p. 132).

The Sinking Fund Act provided for the "extinguishment of the bonds and funded debt" and that "said bonds when purchased shall be conspicuously stamped to show that they were purchased for the Sinking Fund of said City and the interest on said bonds shall be collected and used in like manner with the taxes collected for said Sinking Fund" (Laws Pa., 1874, page 234, Chap. 452, sec. 11), clearly treating the bonds as an existing investment with interest accruing thereon. This case is followed on this point in Bruce et al. v. Pittsburg et al., 166 Pa. St., 152, and in Houston v. Lancaster, 191 Pa. St., 143.

In Kelly v. Minneapolis, 63 Minn., 125, the Court said:

> "This Board [Sinking Fund Commissioners] with the consent of the council may invest the fund in the bonds of the city or in certain other designated bonds. If it is invested in the bonds of the city they are not to be canceled but the interest thereon is to be collected and added to the fund; and when the principal of any city bonds becomes due, such of the bonds in the Sinking Fund as may be necessary are to be sold with the consent of the council and the matured bonds paid" (p. 134).
> "It appears from the record in this case that all of the bonds held by the Sinking Fund are the bonds of the City, hence the amount of the bonds and the money in the fund necessarily represent an equal amount of the out> standing and uncanceled bonds and indebtedness of the city which has already been realized from taxation to pay the bonds, and to ascertain the further amount to be raised by taxation in order to extinguish the entire indebtedness of the city it necessarily follows that the amount of the Sinking Fund is to be deducted from the entire amount of the apparent indebtedness of the City. The balance is its actual debt. The debt limit of the statute has reference to an actual indebtedness for the payment of which a tax must be levied, not to an uncanceled apparent liability" (p. 135).

In Stone v. Chicago, 207 Ill., 492, it was held that the sum reported as due the Sinking Fund was > "not a debt of the city but the amount in the hands of the City Treasurer belonging to the Sinking Fund should be deducted from the amount of the city's bonded indebtedness * * * *" (p. 510).

Citing with approval Kelly v. Minneapolis (supra). It does not appear from this case whether or not the Sinking Fund was invested in whole or in part in the City bonds.

In Savings Bank v. Grace, 102 N. Y., 313, the Court said:

> "Re-purchase of notes or other evidences of debt by the issuer from the holder is redemption, and is equivalent to and has the force of payment" (p. 319).

Under the law being construed the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund were required to > " 'invest the moneys which shall constitute the Sinking Fund for the redemption of the > city debt * * * in the purchase of stocks created by the corporation of the City of New York' " (p. 321).

The stock was not to be cancelled by them until the final redemption of the stock and all interest accruing thereon was to be regularly carried to the said Sinking Fund for the redemption of the debt, and provision was made for its sale. The Court said:

> "From the time of its inception then to its final redemption it is the subject of sale; at all times the basis of interest, and, in the hands of all owners save the Commissioners, a part of the apparent indebtedness of the city" (p. 323).

Commenting upon a Statute authorizing the Commissioners to cancel the stock they said:

> "Its actual cancellation deprived it of no efficacy, for by redemption it was already for all practical purposes extinguished" (p. 324).

> "But the object of every Sinking Fund is to diminish the debt whose existence warranted its foundation" (p. 325).

In holding that stock thus invested in was not a debt, they said:

> "It satisfies also the intent of the Constitutional prohibition. That is aimed at an actual, not a theoretical indebtedness—at a substantial liability which can be discharged only by the enforcement of a tax or an assessment which when levied will be a charge upon the tax payer and a burden for him to remove—not a formal obligation which may remain as evidence of a once existing debt, but which can in no way be regarded as a present debt to be enforced, and which, if not before cancelled in the discretion of the Commissioners, becomes waste paper by the mere efflux of time" (pp. 325, 326).

"It is by force of the ordinance that interest is to be credited, not by reason of the contract or the terms upon which the stock was issued. Nor could that interest or other money be applied in payment of the stock held by the commissioners. That was paid by the purchase, yet if the argument of the respondent should prevail, it must be paid again before its extinguishment" (p. 326).

In applying similar principles to a railroad bond, the Court in Wilds v. St. Louis, A. & T. H. R. R. Co., 102 N. Y., 410, held that conceding the bonds themselves immediately upon their purchase ceased to constitute any part of the corporate debt and were practically extinguished, and "that the provision for interest payments was only a mode for measuring and determining the amount of prescribed contributions to the Sinking Fund; those contributions at least are directed to be made so long as interest accrues upon the bonds treated as valid obligations" (p. 413).

The case of Savings Bank v. Grace (supra) was expressly approved in the recent and thoroughly considered case of Levy v. McClellan, 196 N. Y., 178, where the Court of Appeals of New York, said:

"City stocks or bonds so held are not debts which it can be called upon to pay within the meaning of the Constitutional prohibition. * * * 'The object of every sinking fund, it was said, is to diminish the debt whose existence warrants its foundation,' and the amount 'required to pay off the city debt if it all came presently to maturity' would be a sum 'equal to its bonds or stock not including that held by the Sinking Fund' " (p. 197).

The amount of the "public debt" is to be ascertained for the purpose of determining the proportion to be paid by West Virginia. The Sinking Fund by which the bonds in that fund were purchased came from the current revenues raised by taxation in Virginia, while West Virginia was a part thereof, and to those current revenues she contributed her proportion. If the bonds thus purchased by the Fund to which she contributed are to be treated as a part of the existing debt, she will be required to contribute again her proportion in payment thereof and will therefore in effect pay that proportion twice. The bonds in the Literary Fund were purchased by assets that were the common property of the whole State in which West Virginia owned her proportion. The common assets having been used for the purchase of the bonds now in the Fund, if the bonds are still treated as a part of the public debt and in the final adjustment made a charge upon West Virginia, West Virginia will be compelled to pay her proportion of the bonds and lose entirely the benefit of her share of the assets thus used in making the investment therein.

Inasmuch as both the Sinking Fund and the Literary Fund under the provisions of the Statute regulating their conduct and management are very clearly the property of the State and only kept in separate and distinct accounts for the convenience of the State, it is difficult to see how a purchase by the State for either of these funds of its own obligation, does not extinguish the bond as a debt of the State. The State can hardly be debtor and creditor at the same time.

I am satisfied that the great weight of reason and authority is against the contention of the plaintiff, and I therefore find that the Sinking Fund with interest and the Literary Fund with interest, within the meaning of the decree, were not a part of the "public debt" of the Commonwealth of Virginia on the first day of January, 1861, and that the amount of the public debt was the sum of Thirty-two million, nine hundred and nineteen thousand, eight hundred and sixty-three 93/100 dollars ($32,919,863.93) plus the unpaid and accrued interest thereon amounting to Nine hundred and seventy-seven thousand two hundred and nine 89/100 dollars ($977,209.89) in all $33,-897,073.82.

I state as a "special circumstance" that I consider of importance that on the first day of January, 1861, there was held by the Commonwealth of Virginia in its Sinking Fund, bonds of the Commonwealth of Virginia that had been purchased by its funds and were its property in the amount of One million, three hundred and twenty-nine thousand five hundred and fifty-seven 20/100 dollars ($1,329,557.20), and that the unpaid and accrued interest thereon up to December 31, 1860 was Thirty-nine thousand six hundred and eighty-six 72/100 dollars ($39,686.72), aggregating one million three hundred and sixty-nine thousand two hundred and forty-three and 92/100 dollars ($1,-369,243.92), and that the Commonwealth of Virginia held in its Literary Fund bonds of the Commonwealth of Virginia that had been purchased by its funds and were its property, one million eighty-five thousand and sixty-seven 33/100 dollars ($1,085,067.33) with unpaid and accrued interest thereon up to December 31, 1860 of Thirty-one thousand seven hundred and seventy-six 2/100 dollars ($31,776.02) total One million, one hundred and sixteen thousand eight hundred and forty-three 35/100 dollars ($1,116,843.35).

I further state that the Commonwealth of Virginia was liable under a guaranty made in 1847 upon the bonds of the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal Co. for the "punctual payment of the interest and ultimate redemption of the principal sum of money appearing due" in the sum of Three hundred thousand dollars. That of this sum, bonds aggregating Thirteen thousand dollars ($13,000) were redeemed by the Commonwealth of Virginia April 11, 1903, in her settlement with the United States for Virginia bonds held by the Secretary of the Interior for the benefit of certain Indian tribes, and that the State now holds the same as a claim against the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal Company. The sum of Thirteen thousand dollars ($13,000) does not enter in any way into the aggregate of the indebtedenss as above stated (Rec., p. 289).

The schedules hereto annexed and marked Paragraph 1, Ex. 1, Paragraph 1, Ex. 2 and Paragraph 1, Ex. 3, show by what authority of law, and for what purposes the same was created, and the dates and nature of the bonds being the evidence of said indebtedness.

ALTERNATIVE FINDING.

At the request of defendants, I make an alternative finding that the population of the counties now forming the State of Virginia, as shown by the census of the United States for 1860, is as follows:

Without slaves,	747,136=67.5864%
With slaves,	1,219,630=76.4027%

And for the counties now forming the State of West Virginia:

Without slaves,	358,317=32.4136%
With slaves,	376,688=23.5973%

The assessed valuation of the territory of Virginia for 1860 was: $293,105,895.55

The assessed valuation of the territory of West Virginia for 1860 was: $83,814,355.61

"Supplemental Ex. 7."

PARAGRAPH III OF DECREE.

3. "ALL EXPENDITURES MADE BY THE COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA WITHIN THE TERRITORY NOW CONSTITUTING THE STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA SINCE ANY PART OF THE DEBT WAS CONTRACTED."

This paragraph is clearly based upon the Wheeling Ordinance, which so far as material, reads as follows:

> "The new State shall take upon itself a just proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia prior to the 1st day of January, 1861, to be ascertained by charging to it all State expenditures within the limits thereof and a just proportion of the ordinary expenses of the State Government since any part of said debt was contracted and deducting therefrom the moneys paid into the Treasury of the Commonwealth from the counties included within the said new State during the same period" (Appendix to Rec., p. 122).

The Wheeling Ordinance is not predicated upon the amount of the public debt. Upon the assumption that West Virginia would be liable for "a just proportion of the public debt" in case of separation, the Ordinance prescribes an arbitrary method by which that "just proportion" shall be ascertained. It treats the question as an equation involving three factors: first "by charging to it all State expenditures within the limits thereof"; second, "and a just proportion of the ordinary expenses of the State Government since any part of said debt was contracted"; and third, "and deducting therefrom all moneys paid into the Treasury of the Commonwealth from the counties included within the said new State during the same period."

The result of this equation was to be a "just proportion" without any reference to the amount of the debt itself. The assumed liability was the occasion of the arbitrary equation, and whether, standing alone, it would result in a "just proportion of the public debt" is so far as the ordinance is concerned entirely immaterial. The ordinance declares that the result thus "ascertained" is "a just proportion." If the ordinance is contractural in its character, it is the agreed method between the States of ascertaining "a just proportion of the public debt." In such case the States would be bound thereby as in case of any other contract.

Next in the order of events comes the Constitution of West Virginia, which upon this point provides:

> "8. An equitable proportion of the public debt of the Commonwealth of Virginia prior to the first day of January, in the year one thousand eight hundred and sixty-one, shall be assumed by this State" (App., p. 125).

The Court has held that this section is to be read in pari materia with the ordinance. The rules of construction seem to be well settled by the following authorities:

> "The rule is familiar and well settled that in case of obscure and doubtful words or phraseology, the intention of the law makers is to be resorted to if discoverable from the context, in order to fix and control their meaning so as to reconcile it if possible with the general policy of the law" (p. 677).
> Wilson v. Rousseau, 4 How. U. S., 646.

"It seems all sufficiently plain, and in such case there is a well-settled rule which we must observe. The object of construction applied to a Constitution is to give effect to the intent of its framers and of the people in adopting it. This intent is to be found in the instrument itself, and when the text of a constitutional provision is not ambiguous, the Courts, in giving construction thereto, are not at liberty to search for its meaning beyond the instrument. * * *.

So also where a law is expressed in plain and unambiguous terms whether those terms are general or limited, the legislature should be intended to mean what they have plainly expressed, and consequently no room is left for construction" (pp. 670, 671).

Lake Co. Com. v. Rollins, 130 U. S., 662.

"The general rule is perfectly well settled that where a statute is of doubtful meaning and susceptible upon its face of two constructions, the Court may look into prior and contemporaneous acts, the reasons which induce the act in question, the mischiefs intended to be remedied, the extraneous circumstances and the purpose intended to be accomplished by it, to determine its proper construction. But where the act is clear upon its face and when standing alone it is fairly susceptible of but one construction, that construction must be given to it" (p. 419).

Hamilton v. Rathbone, 175 U. S., 414.

"Consequently if a subsequent act on the same subject affords complete demonstration of the legislative sense of its own language, the rule which has been stated requiring that the subsequent should be incorporated into the foregoing act is a direction to Courts in expounding the provisions of the law" (p. 8).

Alexander v. Mayor, 5 Cranch., 1.

"And if it can be gathered from a subsequent statute in pari materia what meaning the legislature attached to the words of a former statute they will amount to a legislative declaration of its meaning and will govern the construction of the first statute" (p. 565).

U. S. v. Freeman, 3 How., 556.

"In cases of doubt or uncertainty acts in pari materia passed either before or after, and whether repealed or still in force may be referred to in order to discern the intent of the legislature in the use of particular terms, or in the enactment of particular provisions" (p. 235).

Vane v. Newcomb, 132 U. S., 220.

The only question that can arise here is as to the application of these rules to the Ordinance and the Constitutional provision read together. I understand a proper application of these rules, at bar, to be that where there is any doubtful uncertain or ambiguous word, phrase or sentence, which is susceptible of two constructions, one of which would operate equitably and one inequitably, that the "equitable" purpose declared by the Constitutional provision requires a construction that would produce the equitable result. Where, on the other hand, the language is clear and unambiguous there is no room for construction, and the clear and obvious meaning is to be adopted. If it is to be held that by reason of the Constitutional provision equitable results should be reached in every instance, notwithstanding the plain provisions of the Ordinance may operate inequitably, the Constitutional provision would in such case in effect eliminate each or every factor in the equation stated in the Ordinance. This would substitute the Constitutional provision for, rather than read it with, the Ordinance. They are to stand and to be read together, the Constitutional provision being invoked only when it is needed for the purpose of interpreting and making certain what is uncertain and ambiguous.

Bearing upon the equitable construction, it is to be observed that both the Ordinance and the Constitutional provision proceed upon the assumption that by the act of separation, West Virginia became liable for a portion of the "public debt of Virginia," which if liquidated before the separation, would have been borne by the citizens of the whole State upon some equal basis. So far as the liability of the State can be predicated upon the citizens constituting the State as distinguished from the State itself, it can be predicated upon either population, territory or property or upon a combination of two or more or all of them. In either case the same proportional liability would rest upon population, territory or property wherever it might be situated. The unit of liability ascertained, each unit would be liable for its pro rata share of the whole debt wherever the unit might be. It would be so liable no matter how the debt might have been incurred or in what section its proceeds might have been expended, or what particular benefit or advantage any particular unit or set of units might have received therefrom. The relation of the units to each other would be joint and indivisible, the debt a common debt and its proceeds expended from a common fund. Each unit was bound by the action of the lawful majority in incurring the debt and expending the proceeds. Any construction that tends to relieve any of these units from their pro rata share of such common liability for the whole public debt would to that extent be inequitable as it must necessarily result in increasing the liability of the remaining units.

The amount claimed under this paragraph by Virginia is $5,639,302.66

The amount conceded by West West Virginia is..... $1,251,288.92

The items in controversy are as follows:

Item 2 (Rec., p. 373, c. 1, p. 2)—Covington & Ohio Railroad, $1,146,460.42.

By an Act passed February 15, 1853, the Board of Public Works were made "a body politic under the name of the Covington and Ohio Railroad Company" (App., p. 33). This Company had no capital stock or stockholders or officers except as the Board of Public Works acted as its officers.

By Section 3 it was provided that > "The Board of Public Works shall commence and continue the construction of said road," etc.

By Section 4, the same Board was > "authorized to borrow on the credit of the Commonwealth * * * the money necessary to construct and equip said road."

March 13, 1856, the same Board were > "authorized and directed to borrow from time to time * * * the sum of Five hundred thousand dollars, to be appropriated to the construction of the Covington and Ohio Railroad" (App., p. 34).

A specific provision was made for the manner in which the money was to be expended. March 20, 1858, they were again authorized to borrow for the same purpose under the same restrictions, Eight hundred thousand dollars. (App., p. 34), and on February 29, 1860, the sum of Two and one-half millions. Under these various Acts, it is conceded that prior to January 1, 1861, the sum above mentioned had been expended within the limits of West Virginia.

I find that the sum thus expended was an expenditure by the Commonwealth of Virginia within the territory now constituting the State of West Virginia prior to January 1, 1861.

Alternative Finding.

At the request of the defendant I find in the alternative that it appears that on February 26, 1866, the Commonwealth of Virginia passed an Act incorporating the "Covington and Ohio Railroad Company" (App., p. 35) and on March 1, 1866, West Virginia (App., p. 37) passed an Act incorporating the same Company. By these Acts upon the performance of the conditions therein specified, the Company was to > "have all the rights, interests and privileges of whatsoever kind in and to the Covington and Ohio Railroad and appurtenances thereto belonging, now the property" of either state (Sec. 2, of each Act).

On February 26, 1867 (App., p. 40) additional legislation to enable the completion of the road and authorizing its consolidation with four other railroads was passed by West Virginia. An Act for the same purpose and with substantially the same provisions, with some immaterial variations, was passed by Virginia March 1, 1867 (App., p. 43). The name of the road was changed by both Acts to the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Company. By section 14, of the latter Act, the Railroad was given the > "right * * * to purchase the stock held by the State in said company * * * to pay any debt which it may owe the State * * * by surrendering * * * bonds for an amount equal to the debt proposed to be paid, and may also purchase the right of the State in and to the Blue Ridge Railroad by the surrender of State bonds to an amount equal to the value of said road, etc." (App., p. 45).

Nothing appears in the Record to show whether any such purchase of stock of the State by the Road was made, nor does anything appear to show whether any debt of the Road to the State was paid. It does appear and I find as a fact that the State of Virginia received in 1870 for the Blue Ridge Railroad from said Chesapeake and Ohio R. R. Co., $625,348.08 (Rec., p. 487).

I find as a fact that the State of Virginia was relieved by the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Company of a guarantee of the bonds of the Virginia Central Railroad, amounting to One hundred thousand dollars (Rec., p. 487).

Item 3.—Winchester & Potomac Railroad, $170,-532.00.

This item results from an item of $270,000 which consists of $120,000 paid for stock subscribed, and paid for by the State, and $150,000 loaned by the State to the Railroad Company (Rec., p. 489).

It raises the question as to whether the subscribing and paying for stock in an internal improvement company, whose improvements were located within the limits of West Virginia was "an expenditure made by the Commonwealth of Virginia within the territory now constituting the state of West Virginia," etc.

It is contended upon the part of the plaintiff that the various improvement companies were merely the method or machinery adopted by the State for the purpose of creating internal improvements, and that as declared by its Board of Public Works,

> "It was not the original purpose of the legislature in creating the fund for internal improvement that the aid to be extended to joint stock companies should be afforded upon the principle of mere money making" (Rep. Bd. of Public Works, Vol. 6, p. 10).

and

> "It must be remembered that these improvements were not fostered by the legislature through contributions in subscriptions and loans merely as investments of so much money in profitable stocks but that they were actuated by a higher consideration, that of promoting the prosperity of the State at large by contracting to build up the local prosperity of its different sections" (Same Vol. 12, p. 8).

and that this being the dominating and controlling purpose these were, within a proper construction of the decree, "expenditures made by the Commonwealth of Virginia," &c., &c.

I have no doubt that the purpose thus declared by the Board of Public Works was the controlling purpose that led the State to engage in these public improvements through the method adopted of organizing joint stock companies and the State becoming a stockholder therein. It is at the same time clear that the element of investment and an expected return therefrom and a belief in the value of the investment was an important element from the beginning. In giving the reasons for adopting this method, the same Board said:

> "Private wealth will of itself take the direction which personal interest prompts."
> * * *
> "But it can never be to its [the State] interest, for many reasons, to become the sole proprietor of all the public works within its territory.
> Experience testifies that they will be more economically improved and better repaired if the management be left to the individuals who subscribe to their stock, with a view to > private gain, than if confined to public officers or agents. The Commonwealth should subscribe to so much of their stock and upon such terms as will suffice to elicit individual wealth for public improvement" * * * (Rep. Bd. Pub. Works Vol. I, p. 48).

For the purpose of inducing subscriptions they suggest,

> "By yielding to the individual subscribers the profit of the State on its shares of the stock of any company where required to secure such individuals against temporary loss, a much smaller subscription of the public money will suffice to draw forth private enterprise."

On page 81, they say, after having discussed the failure of the stock of some of the companies to yield an immediate income, that the foundation had been laid that would > "assure to the Commonwealth a speedy return for such sums as the General Assembly may authorize the Board of Public Works to subscribe out of the funds for internal improvement."

and referred to the method adopted to > "arouse the enterprise and patriotism of their fellow citizens in general to embark their private fortunes in the career of internal improvement."

A report of this Board for 1818 shows that returns were expected from the James River project of Thirty-five thousand dollars per year, and the report for 1819 shows that the stock of the Dismal

Swamp Company and Roanoke Navigation Company were above par, and the Swift Run Gap Turnpike Company had paid from five to ten per cent dividends for several years. In the report for 1831, referring to the completion of the James River Improvement they say that

> "A revenue not only sufficient to pay the interest upon the amount of the expenditure but that a surplus greatly beyond it will be realized."

It was the expectation of these profits that justified the Act of 1820 (App., p. 50) under which the State practically took over the property of the James River Company and guaranteed its stockholders 12 per cent. dividend for twelve years and 15 per cent. "forever thereafter."

Substantially all of the Acts, both general and special in their character, authorizing the Board of Public Works to subscribe for stock of the various improvement companies, comtemplated the receipt of dividends on the stock of the State and made specific provision for its disposal and use, recognizing the value of the stock.

Under the Act of 1817, Sec. 32 (App., p. 16) a general provision was made giving the state the prior right to purchase the stock of other stockholders and prohibiting its offer to others until it was offered to the State. In order to induce the investment of private capital in the stock of the companies it suspended its right to dividends upon its own stock until the stock of other subscribers had "netted to them six per cent. per annum" (App., p. 6). Under a Statute passed in 1816 private subscription to 3/5 of the stock was required before the subscriptions were made on behalf of the Commonwealth (App., p. 5). The privilege as to suspending dividends for the benefit of the other stockholders was repealed in 1828 (App., p. 10). While the proportion of stock taken by the Commonwealth was at first 2/5 of the capital, this proportion was changed in 1848, so that in most, if not all of the instances thereafter, the State was authorized to subscribe 3/5 of the capital. (See Acts of 1848, Chap. 196, sec. 3, p. 220.)

The Act of April 9, 1838 (Acts of Va., 1838, Chap. 12, Sec. 3, p. 24), provided for the payment of the interest and final redemption of the principal sum borrowed for the payment of stock subscriptions. It also provided that > "the stock of any joint stock company subscribed for or purchased with the money so borrowed, together with the dividends and other net income which may accrue therefrom to the Commonwealth or to the fund for internal improvement, shall be and the same are hereby appropriated and pledged," &c., for the payment of such loans, thus holding out the stock of the Commonwealth with its expected dividends as a security of value as an inducement to investors.

The Constitution of Virginia of 1851 recognized these stocks as the property of the Commonwealth by the following provisions:

> "The General Assembly may at any time direct the sale of the stocks held by the Commonwealth in internal improvement and other companies, but the proceeds of such sale, if made before the payment of the public

The Act authorizing the subscription to the stock of the Shepherdstown and Smithfield Turnpike Company by the Board of Public Works, passed February 20, 1826 (Acts of Va. 1825-26, p. 66), contains this proviso:

> "Provided that the money hereby authorized to be advanced to said company by taking part of the stock thereof shall be applied exclusively to the completion of said road should any part of it be unfinished when the aforesaid sums of money shall respectively become payable."

A similar act relating to the Petersburg Railroad Company, passed March 22, 1831 (Acts of Va. 1830-31, p. 205), contains a similar proviso:

> "Provided that no part of the stock herein authorized to be subscribed shall be payable until said three-fifth shall have been fully paid and expended by the said company in the construction of the road aforesaid unless at the option of the said Board."

The General Act of February 11, 1832, contains this provision:

> "When the Board of Public Works having made any subscription to the stock of any company shall have good cause to believe * * * that the funds of the company are misapplied or will probably be misapplied, it shall be the duty of the said Board to withhold payment of their subscriptions until proper legal measures can be taken to secure * * * the faithful application of the funds of the company" (App., Sec. 4, p. 18).

The conditions thus imposed by the Commonwealth to enable it to thus indirectly control or dispose of the funds of the corporation is clearly inconsistent with the idea that it had any right to control the assets other than that of an ordinary stockholder, as, if they were within its control, such legislation would have been unnecessary.

The act to amend the Charter of the James River and Kanawha Company, passed March, 1860, clearly recognized the distinction between the rights of the State as a stockholder and a creditor of the Company (App., p. 108).

Code of Virginia, 1860, Chapter 67, Sec. 28, p. 391, authorized the Board of Public Works to purchase

> "any work of any internal improvement in which the State is a stockholder, or otherwise interested,"

at a sale

> "by virtue of mortgage, judgment or other lien, * * * on the part and for the use of the Commonwealth" (p. 391).

That the state fully recognized these stocks as investments of value and that its rights were those of a stockholder only, seems clear.

The case of U. S. v. Stanford, 161 U. S., 412, is relied upon as sustaining the contention of the plaintiff. The only question involved in that case was whether a stockholder of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, the California Company, was personally liable as such stockholder for the bonds of the United States "loaned to railroad companies for the purposes indicated in the Act of 1862" (p. 428). The Statutes of California made such stockholders liable for all of the road's "debts and liabilities" (p. 414) the Union Pacific Railroad chartered by Congress and enjoying on the same terms with the Central Pacific Railroad Company the benefit of the bonds, not being so liable. It is true that in the opinion, the Court said:

> "These ends were to be attained through the agency of a corporation created by Congress and of certain corporations organized under State laws which Congress selected as instruments to be employed in accomplishing the public objects specified in its legislation" (p. 427).

I do not understand that by the use of this language the Court intended to be understood as holding that the relation of principal and agent existed between the United States and the corporations in question, or that their property or assets and the right to control the same was in any way changed or affected by reason of their having been selected as such "agency" or "instrument," or that by reason of their having been so selected the United States acquired any control of or interest in the assets of such companies. They were agencies and instrumentalities in the same sense that all public service corporations are instrumentalities and agencies of the State, and only in that sense did Congress extend its aid to these particular corporations to accomplish the objects desired. The opinion in effect so states:

> "The Supreme end sought to be attained was by means of private capital and Governmental aid to secure the construction of the > whole line, for the benefit primarily of the United States and for the use of all the people" (p. 430).

The companies "private capital" was building the road and the Government was simply rendering aid to an "agency" selected by it for that purpose and in that sense only was the road in question the agent of, or instrumentality of, the Government. That the assets of these companies were their own and not the property of the United States was expressly held in the Sinking Fund cases, 99 U. S., 700, where the Court said:

> "It is a matter of no consequence that the Secretary of the Treasury is made the Sinking Fund agent and the Treasury of the United States the depository or that the investment is to be made in the public funds of the United States. This does not make the deposit a payment of the debt due the United States (p. 725)," because as the Court said:

> "While the money is retained it is only that it may be put into the fund which, although kept in the Treasury, is owned by the Company" (p. 726),

and

> "Under the circumstances the retaining of the money in the Treasury as a part of the Sinking Fund is in law a payment to the company" (p. 726).

There is no intimation in the opinion that there was any financial relation existing between the United States and the companies other than that of creditor and debtor or that the money that the companies expended in constructing the road was in any sense, either directly or indirectly, money of the United States or an expenditure by the United States.

I find nothing in the case that justifies the inference that these corporations were agents to apply money put into their hands by the Government to construct the road and were therefore expending the money of the Government therefor.

In Liverpool Ins. Co. v. Massachusetts, 10 Wall., 566, the Court stated the conditions under which joint stock associations will be held to be a corporation within the scope of a Statute which "permits it to exercise its corporate function in that State on the condition of payment of a specific tax," and for the purpose of suits and in some other particulars, such associations have been recognized by the Courts as corporations.

The following well considered authorities seem to establish clearly the distinction between the State as a stockholder and the corporation as a legal entity.

In Bank of U. S. v. Planters Bank of Ga., 9 Wheat., 904 the State of Georgia was a stockholder in the Planters Bank. The point was raised that the State was a "party defendant." In overrul-ing this contention Mr. Chief Justice Marshall said:

> "A suit against the Planters Bank of Georgia is no more a suit against the State of Georgia than against any other individual corporator (p. 906). * * *
>
> The state does not by becoming a corporator identify itself with the corporation. The Planters Bank of Georgia is not the State of Georgia although the State holds an interest in it.
>
> It is, we think, a sound principle that when a government becomes a partner in any trading company, it devests itself so far as concerns the transactions of that company of its sovereign character and takes that of a private citizen. Instead of communicating to the company its privileges and its prerogatives, it descends to a level with those with whom it associates itself and takes the character which belongs to its associates, and to the business which is to be transacted (p. 907). * * * As a member of a corporation a Government never exercises its sovereignty. It acts merely as a corporator and exercises no other power in the management of the affairs of the corporation than are expressly given by the incorporating act * * * and exercises no power or privilege which is not derived from the Charter" (p. 908).

This case has been frequently approved on this point. (See Rose's Notes.)

In Bank of Kentucky v. Wister, 2 Peters, 318, where the State owned the whole of the stock of the Bank, a case much stronger than the case presented at bar, the Court said:

> "it was insisted that the suit was virtually against a sovereign state," (p. 322).

In affirming 9 Wheat., 904, and holding against the contention, the Court said:

> "But this Court is of the opinion that the question is no longer open here" (p. 322).

In Briscoe v. Bank of Kentucky, 11 Pet., 257, the question was whether the notes of the Bank were bills of credit issued by the State. The State was the sole owner of the stock of the Bank and all private interest was expressly excluded. Its officers were chosen by the Legislature. It was contended that the Bank was the "mere agent of the State." In holding the contrary, the Court said, answering the following question in the negative:

> "The State of Kentucky is the exclusive stockholder in the Bank of the Commonwealth, but does this fact change the character of the corporation? Does it make the Bank identical with the State? And are the operations of the Bank the operations of the State? Is the Bank the mere instrument of the sovereignty to effectuate its designs and is the State responsible for its acts?" (p. 323).

and again:

> "If the Bank of the Commonwealth is not the State nor the agent of the State, if it possesses no more power than is given to it in the act of incorporation and precisely the same as if the stock were owned by private individuals, how can it be contended that the notes of the Bank can be called bills of credit in contradistinction from the notes of other banks?" (p. 326).

See Rose's Notes for approving citations and also Curran v. Arkansas, 15 How., 304.

This question seems to have been clearly settled by the Courts of Virginia.

The case of James River & Kanawha Co. v. Early, 13 Gratt., 541, was an action to recover for the negligence of the corporation. In discussing the question of the liability of the Company, the Court said:

> "It is not a public corporation representing the public and administering public funds for the benefit of the public, but it is a joint stock company which has undertaken the construction of a work, useful to the public certainly, but intended for the private emolument of the stockholders in dividends of the profits" (p. 552).

> "That the State owned a large interest in the stock of the company will not vary the case * * * a mere interest taken by the Commonwealth in the stock would not be sufficient to bring an action against the company for neglect of its corporate duty within the influence of the decision in the case of Sayre v. The Northwestern Turnpike Road, 10 Leigh, 454 * * *" (p. 553).

This case is clearly in line with the decisions of the United States Supreme Court upon the relation of the State to a corporation. These corporations were not "administering public funds for the benefit of the public."

It seems to me clear that the relation of principal and agent did not exist between the State and these corporations in which it was a stockholder. While in a popular general sense they may be termed the machinery, instrumentality or agency through which the State operated in making the particular disbursement, they were such agency, machinery and instrumentality in the same sense that they were the agency, machinery or instrumentality of the other stockholders, or perhaps, in the added sense in which every public service corporation is the agency, machinery or instrumentality of the State. The State held two-fifths or three-fifths of the stock, but had no more control over the funds of the company, or any more title to the assets of the company, than any other stockholder holding a like amount of the stock. Like other stockholders it was an investor with the same rights and privileges. It may be said that as a matter of public policy, in a general way, the State was in this manner, indirectly, at least, making an expenditure, and no investment can be made without an expenditure. This case must be determined, however, by well-recognized legal rules. The language of the decree is plain and unambiguous. To hold these subscriptions thus made for investment to be expenditures by the State "within the territory" it would be necessary to read into the decree the words "either directly or indirectly" which I do not feel at liberty to do.

I find therefore that the sums in question in case of the joint stock companies in which the State was a stockholder were expenditures made by the respective companies from their own funds and not by the State. I therefore disallow the sum of $120,000, subscribed and paid for stock in the Winchester & Potomac Railroad Company by virtue of the Acts of 1832 and 1833 (App., pp. 28 and 29).

By an Act passed February 13, 1838 (App., p. 29), the Board of Public Works were > "directed to loan on behalf of the Commonwealth * * * to the Winchester & Poto> mac Railroad Company * * * upon the condition that the salaries of the officers and servants of the said company shall not be directly or indirectly increased during the existence of this debt", and upon

> " a mortgage upon the whole property, real and personal, and upon the net income of all their tolls and receipts"

the sum of $150,000. Specific provision as to security was made. Acceptance of the loan gave the Legislature " a right to tax the stock, property and profits" of said Company, and the Company was required to pay off all prior liens so as to make the mortgage of the State a first lien (App., p. 30).

This is clearly a loan with specific and careful provision made to secure its repayment, and was so intended by each party thereto. I therefore disallow the item.

ALTERNATIVE FINDING.

At the request of the plaintiff under this item, I make the alternative finding:

First.—That $120,000 was subscribed and paid by the Commonwealth for stock in the Winchester and Potomac Railroad under the Act of 1832, and

Second.—That the sum of One hundred and fifty thousand dollars, with specific provision to secure its repayment with interest thereon was loaned by the Commonwealth to said Railroad under the Act of 1838, and that the portion of the road in West Virginia was 63.16%.

As a special circumstance that I consider of importance, I also find that an Act was passed February 24, 1846 (App., p. 30), providing for an annuity of $5,000 in lieu of interest upon the debt due by said Company to the Commonwealth, and all dividends upon the stock of the Commonwealth in said company. So long as the annuity was paid, "the payment of the principal of said debt shall be so long postponed" (App., Sec. 2, p. 31). If default were made in payment "the whole of said debt and interest due" are to be collected (Sec. 3) and the lien for the whole debt and interest was fully retained (Sec. 4).

February 22, 1866, the Company was authorized "to pay into the Treasury of the Commonwealth" $83,333.33 (Sec. 1, App., p. 31). Payment could be made in State bonds at their par value, and when made the "claim of the State against said Company shall be lifted and discharged." Under this Act there was paid into the Treasury of the State in bonds and interest in 1866, $118,518.12 (Rec., p. 462).

Item 6.—Berryville & Charlestown Turnpike Company, $11,932.52.

This sum was paid upon a stock subscription and is therefore disallowed.

ALTERNATIVE FINDING.

I find in the alternative at the request of the plaintiff that the Commonwealth subscribed and paid for stock in said road under Acts of 1849 and 1850 $20,455.74, and that 58 1/3% of the road was in West Virginia.

Items 10, 11, 12, 13 and 14 all relate to the Kanawha Turnpike and the Kanawha River Improvements.

An Act was passed February 17, 1820, relating to the James River Company (App., p. 50). In its preamble it declared that that company was willing to consent to such modification of its charter as would enable the company

> "as an agent acting and holding in trust for the benefit of this Commonwealth to undertake and carry the said improvements into effect in such manner as the General Assembly shall from time to time direct and require, and under the direction and superintendence of such agent or agents as may from time to time be appointed for that purpose by appropriating to these objects such sums of money as they may borrow," &c., upon the condition that the company would consent to applying its surplus tolls and income

> "to the payment of the interest on the money which they may so borrow," except so much as might be necessary to pay a dividend on the present stock of the company of twelve per cent. for twelve years and fifteen per cent. forever thereafter. It was stipulated

> "that the General Assembly shall provide for making good any deficiency in the payment of the interest on any money so borrowed which may remain to be provided for > after applying the surplus tolls and other income of the said company with the exceptions aforesaid to the payment of interest as aforesaid" (App., p. 51).

It was provided that upon its acceptance by the Company, the Act should be > "considered a compact between this Commonwealth and the said company" and while subject to change and modification, no such change and modification should be made

> "as will take from the James River Company their right to the dividends or any part of the dividends upon their stock allowed to them by this Act" (App., p. 51).

The improvements contemplated were to be "prescribed by the Legislature" and should from time to time be made under the superintendence of the Commissioner or Commissioners, agent or agents as the General Assembly should from time to time appoint. It was provided that the works of the Company > "shall forever thereafter be esteemed and taken as public highways for the transportation of all goods, commodities and produce whatsoever * * * and the road, canals, locks dams and other works when perfected with all tolls, and other profits and emoluments arising therefrom shall be and the same are hereby vested in the said company as agents in trust for this Commonwealth" (App., p. 53);

and in Section 10 the company was referred to as, after giving their assent,

"holding as an agent in trust for the benefit of the Commonwealth."

Repairs were to be

"contracted for and made by the Company from time to time under the control, direction and superintendence of the Commissioners on the part of the Commonwealth" (App. p. 56).

Commissioners were provided for, and no contracts were to be made by the Company for the improvement of the Kanawha River and Road until the same should be submitted to and approved in writing by the Commissioners, named to superintend the works on such River and Road (do. p. 56). All contracts for making any improvements on the James and Jackson River were to be "submitted to and approved in writing by the Commissioners" (do. p. 56).

The Treasurer of the State was made ex officio the Treasurer of the Company. Money was to be borrowed "as the General Assembly shall hereafter direct" (do. p. 57). Certificates issued for money borrowed were "to be redeemed only at the pleasure of the General Assembly."

The surplus of such tolls and other incomes after the "payment of the expenses, dividends and interest as aforesaid shall from time to time be paid into the Treasury of this Comonwealth to the credit of the fund for Internal Im> provement, to be disposed of as may from time to time be directed by law" (do. p. 58).

By an Act passed February 24, 1823 (App., p. 64), a much more pronounced change in the character of the legal relation was made. All of the powers and duties of the existing President and Directors were "superseded and annulled." Certain officials of the State were made ex officio the President and Directors of the Company and they succeeded to and possessed

> "all the rights, powers, duties and privileges of the existing President and Directors" (do., p. 64), except so far as may be otherwise directed by the provisions of the act. All of the moneys were to be > "kept in the public treasury separate from other public moneys" (do., p. 65).

The funds raised and used were to be paid into and disbursed from the Public Treasury (do., pp. 65, 66 and 67). Commissioners were created with powers to carry into effect the provisions of the Act (do., pp. 67 and 68). They were to appoint such "engineers, managers or agents" as they might think necessary and remove them at their pleasure. Provision was made for carrying out the contracts made by the Company "as if the powers of the said company had continued" (do., p. 69). Its superintendents and officers were to continue until > "superseded by appointments under this Act or their offices annulled by the provisions thereof" (do., p. 69).

These and numerous provisions show that the State by virtue of these two acts had in effect acquired title to all the property of the company. The Acts were so construed in the case of Higginbotham Exr. v. The Commonwealth, 25 Grattan, 627, where the Court said, in describing the relation of the State to the Company:

> "Here then we have a solemn 'compact' between the State and the Company. * * * Such was the solemn obligation assumed by the State as the price of the stockholders' property" (p. 628), and referring to the Act of March 16, 1832:

> "On that day, however, a new company with greatly extended powers was chartered called the James River and Kanawha Company, to which all the interest of the State in the old James River Company was transferred" (p. 628).

The record does not disclose when, and what for, or how, these items were paid. In order to supply the deficiency of proof in this regard, I have had recourse to the notes of the accountants and report as a part of the case so much of their notes, agreed to by them, as relates to these items as "Supplemental Exhibit I."

I find by these notes that of Item 10, $152,130.54, the sum of $149,491.90 was expended by the State "within the Territory" after March 19, 1823, and before March 16, 1832, on the Kanawha Turnpike Road. There is nothing in the record to show when the actual transfer by the State was made under the provisions of the Act of March 16, 1832. I find that the sum of $2,638.64 was expended by the Commonwealth after March 16, 1832, but was an actual expenditure, not an investment or a loan, and I therefore allow the whole sum of $152,130.54 as an expenditure.

I find that Item 11, $2,593.92 was expended by the Commonwealth "within the territory" upon the Kanawha after December 31, 1834, and that it was an actual expenditure by the State and not an investment or a loan, and I therefore allow it as an expenditure.

I find that Item 12, $7,189.65 was also expended by the Commonwealth "within the territory" upon the Kanawha Turnpike after December 31, 1834, and was an expenditure and not an investment or a loan and I therefore allow the item.

I find that under Item 13, the Commonwealth expended after March 13, 1823, and prior to March 16, 1832, "within the territory" upon the Kanawha Turnpike, $3,202.53 and that the State expended "within the Territory" upon the same turnpike, the sum of $77,752.75, after March 16, 1832 ($49,935 of which was on account of contracts made and services rendered prior to March 16, 1832); that the whole sum was an expenditure by the State and not an investment or a loan and I therefore allow the whole sum.

As to Item 14, I find that the amount of $59,572.36 was all expended by the Commonwealth within the territory after March 19, 1823, and prior to March 19, 1832, and I therefore allow the same.

Alternative Finding.

As an alternative finding at the request of the defendant I find that the State was to transfer

> "her whole interest in the works and property of the present James River Company to the James River and Kanawha Company in payment for its subscription for 10,000 shares of stock" (App. p. 87).

There is nothing in the record to show whether this transfer was actually made. It does not appear whether there was a general meeting of the stockholders upon which the transfer was to be made.

Item 15—Kanawha Board bonds, $60,000.

I find that this was a loan of $60,000 in bonds to the James River and Kanawha Company under the provisions of the Act of March 23, 1860, sec. 9 (App. p. 110) which authorized a loan for $300,000 to the James River and Kanawha Company upon a "deed of trust or mortgage upon the works, property and net revenue to the Commonwealth for the payment of the principal and interest of said $300,000." It was also provided that such lien

> "shall take precedence over any lien created by said company to secure their bonds authorized to be issued by this Act."

Under this Act, $60,000 was loaned (Rec., p. 490).

There is nothing in the record to show whether it has or not been repaid, although counsel for West Virginia stated at the argument that he did not think it had been repaid.

This was a clear loan with careful provisions made to secure and a reasonable expectation of its repayment, and I therefore disallow it as an expenditure.

ATERNATIVE FINDING.

I find, as an alternative finding at the request of the plaintiff that the sum of $60,000 was loaned to the James River and Kanawha Company by virtue of the provisions of the Act of March 23, 1860, sec. 9 (App., p. 110), and that the loan has not been paid.

Item 17, $7,882.92 was withdrawn by the plaintiff upon the ground that the portion of the road charged for was wholly in the State of Maryland.

Item 25,—Brandonville, Kingwood and Evansville Road—$10,595.73

Item 28, Clarksburg & Buchanan Turnpike, $19,259.36.

Item 35, Kingwood and West Union Turnpike, $18,140.61, are all for macadamizing (Rec., p. 451).

In the case of the Brandonville, Kingwood and Evansville Road, the State although a small stockholder therein, paid out the sum independent of its interest as a stockholder (Rec., p. 480).

By an Act passed March 18, 1853, the Board of Public Works were directed > "to have such parts of the Clarksburg and Buchannon Turnpike Road macadamized or planked as they may think stand in need of such improvement" (App., p. 140).

By an Act passed February 28, 1853, $28,000 was appropriated for the purpose of macadamizing the Kingwood and West Union Turnpike and the Board of Public Works was authorized > "to pay the said appropriation as is provided by law" (App. p. 143).

These were not investments or loans. They were sums directly expended by the State upon the public improvements owned by these companies to be sure, and while the expenditure no doubt increased the value of the properties the expenditure was in my judgment made by the State, for the sole purpose of promoting the public convenience, and were not intended, so far as anything disclosed in the record shows, as gratuities to the companies involved. I therefore think they come fairly within the scope of an expenditure and allow them as such.

Item 53—Harpers Ferry Raid—$189,718.59—

I think that "an expenditure within the territory" in question means expenditures that are local in their character; that are localized by the subjects upon, or for, which they are expended, and the benefits which enure from such expenditures are benefits that the territory in question received the benefit of, it remaining therein, as distinguished from the rest of the State outside of that territory, the result of which in case of physical property remained within the territory after the expenditure had been made, not expenditures the benefit of which were common to all of the people of the State irrespective of the localities in which they resided. These expenses do not appear to me to come within the scope of such an expenditure. The only benefit the "territory" derived therefrom was the same benefit that it derived in common with the rest of the State. It was not an expenditure made for the benefit of that particular "territory." The money was appropriated and paid "for the Defense of the Commonwealth" (App., p. 149) not for any particular part of the Commonwealth. I therefore disallow this item as a direct expenditure.

ALTERNATIVE FINDING.

At the request of the plaintiff I find that the Commonwealth paid on account of the Harpers Ferry Raid that occurred "within the territory" of West Virginia, the sum of $189,718.59.

Item 54—School Commissioners—$830,865.37.

This amount is claimed by the plaintiff as an expenditure "within the territory" out of a total of expenditure for like purpose in the whole Commonwealth of $3,056,239.84 (Rec., p. 538-H).

The Constitution of Virginia directed that > "One equal moiety of the capitation tax upon white persons shall be applied to the purposes of education in primary and free schools" (Con. Va. Art. VI. Sec. 24—Code Va. 1860, p. 46).

February 21, 1818, an annual appropriation of $45,000 for the education of poor children was made.

This was increased to $70,000; and in 1851 to $75,000 and to $80,000 in 1853-4 (Code Va. 1860, p. 417, note). The sum expended by Virginia for primary schools was a regular, current, annual and permanent charge upon the State by virtue of Constitutional and Statutory provisions. Being thus a permanent requirement of its fundamental law it was an expenditure that the State was bound to make annually and was a part of "ordinary expenses of the Government." It was an expenditure general in its character, not confined to or appropriated to any particular district and as much a general charge as the expense of the Judicial or Executive branches or the Board of Public Works which are treated by both parties as ordinary expenses; I therefore disallow the item as an expenditure.

ALTERNATIVE FINDING.

At the request of the plaintiff I find that the sum paid the School Commissioners "within the territory of West Virginia" was $830,865.37.

Item 55, Surveys—$106,416.14.

This item comes from an aggregate of $250,-206.56. An analysis of this sum shows by a statement agreed to by the accountants, which is reported as a part of the case and marked "Supplemental Ex. 2," that the sum of $106,983.67 was for expenditures that were general in their character (such as a salary paid by the State to the Chief Engineer $30,809.73, &c.), and the proportion charged to West Virginia of that sum was reached by a percentage based upon the sum that was actually charged upon the books in the different sections, so that the general charge would be in proportion thereto. This left $143,222.89 that was actually charged upon the books of the State and could be traced into each section; the sum that was thus charged and was thus traceable that was expended in the territory of West Virginia was $60,873.19. While it is a narrow and close question, I think the general charge should be deducted from this item and charged under ordinary expenses as they were regular, ordinary and current expenses of a branch of the State Government and general in their character, not allocated to, or apportioned to, any particular territory. It is suggested that many of these surveys were not productive of result, no roads being built. It might also be said that the roads, if built, proving worthless, might have been abandoned. None the less the money would have been expended. No road could be built without the preliminary survey, and if the initial expense, disclosed the unwisdom of proceeding further, it seems to me it was no less an expense properly incurred whether the survey was or not followed by construction and does not affect the fact that the money was expended in that locality for a legitimate purpose. A direct expenditure for the work is treated by both parties as an "expenditure" and for the same reason the survey preliminary to and, if constructed, a necessary part of, the work is also an expenditure. The sum which this branch of the Government actually expended "within the limits of the territory of West Virginia," $60,873.19 I allow as an "expenditure."

Item 56, Trans-Allegheny Lunatic Asylum, $27,000.

It was conceded that on January 1, 1861, this sum was in the hands of the Treasurer of the Asylum unexpended. The record, p. 452, should read "and had not been expended." It was to be used in completing its building. (Rec., p. 471) It was on deposit with the Weston Branch of the Exchange Bank of Virginia and was taken therefrom by the so-called Pierpoint or Restored Government. (Wheeling Acts, Extra Session, July 1, 1861) (App., p. 135) On that date $5,316.98 was "placed at the disposal of the Board of Directors of the Lunatic Asylum" and by an Act passed January 14 , 1862, the sum of $21,684 (making with the previous sum $.98 more than the $27,000) was appropriated to the Lunatic Asylum to be expended in > "completing the South wing of said building being the balance of the amount taken from the branch of the Exchange Bank of Virginia at Weston" (App., p. 136).

Under the authority of Eastern State Hospital v. Graves (supra), this money thus in the hands of the Treasurer of the Asylum, prior to its being taken by the Restored Government, was the property of the Commonweatlh, and while it was intended to be used in the completion of the buildings, it had not been so used, and had not therefore been expended on January 1, 1861. I therefore disallow this item.

Alternative Finding.

I find in the alternative at the request of the plaintiff that $27,000 was in the hands of the Treasurer of the Asylum the property of the Commonwealth on or before January 1st, 1861, for the purpose of being expended in the completion of its buildings and that it was afterwards taken therefrom by the Restored State of Virginia, and returned to the Asylum—$5,316.98 July 1, 1866, and $21,684 January 14, 1862.

Items 57 to 65 inclusive.

These are all for sums paid by the Commonwealth on account of stock subscriptions in Bridge Companies, aggregating $78,412.50, and are disallowed.

ALTERNATIVE FINDING.

I find in the alternative at the request of the plaintiff that $78,412.50 was actually paid by the Commonwealth on account of its subscriptions to the stock of the various Bridge Companies mentioned in said items, and that all of the bridges were located "within the territory now constituting the State of West Virginia."

Items 66 to 69 inclusive.

These are all for sums paid by the Commonwealth on account of stock subscriptions in navigation companies aggregating $210,500. and are disallowed.

ALTERNATIVE FINDING.

I find in the alternative at the request of the plaintiff that $210,500 was actually paid by the Commonwealth on account of its subscriptions to the stock of the various navigation companies mentioned therein and that the property of all of the companies was located within the territory now constituting the State of West Virginia.

Items 70 to 147 inclusive.

These are all for sums paid by the Commonwealth on account of its stock subscriptions to the various turnpike companies mentioned therein, aggregating $803,555.83, and are disallowed.

ALTERNATIVE FINDING.

I find in the alternative at the request of the plaintiff that $803,555.83 was actually paid by the Commonwealth on account of its subscription to the stock of the various turnpike companies mentioned therein.

The property of all of these companies except those mentioned in items 70 to 80 inclusive is "within the territory now constituting West Virginia" and aggregates $700,103.49. A portion of the property of the companies mentioned in items 70 to 80 inclusive is in part within those limits. Apportioning the total amount paid to the amount within those limits would give the sum of $103,-452.34.

Items 148 and 149, $391,800.

These are for sums paid by the Commonwealth on account of its stock subscriptions to the banks mentioned therein, and are disallowed.

ALTERNATIVE FINDING.

I find in the alternative at the request of the plaintiff that $391,800 was actually paid by the Commonwealth on account of its subscription to the stock of the banks therein mentioned, and that they were located "within the limits of the territory now constituting West Virginia."

Item 150—Loan to the Town of Bath $2,500.

March 8, 1847, an Act was passed,

> "to provide for the construction of a road from Bath in Morgan County to the mouth of the St. John's run on the Potomac."

The Board of Public Works was authorized > "to pay from time to time out of the fund for Internal improvement a sum or sums of money not exceeding $2,500 to the Treasurer of the Trustees of the Town of Bath * * * for the purpose of constructing a road from the town of Bath to the mouth of St. John's run on the Potomac."

The Treasurer was to > "pay or deliver such sums as may be required from time to time" and he was to be liable for any defaults therein "as for other defaults upon his official bond," anticipating the question that might be raised that in the relation thus created the money received by him would not be the town's money and he be liable therefor as its Treasurer (App., p. 155, Sec. 1). The Act provided that the Trustees were to have "the disposition of the money" and to exercise the same powers as the "president and directors of turnpike companies." The Board of Public Works were to prescribe the tolls "such tolls to be applied to the necessary expenses and repairs of the road" (do., Sec. 2). The surplus after the payment of the > "necessary expenses and repairs of the road" was

> "to be applied in payment of the interest on the sum paid on the part of the Commonwealth for the construction of said road"

and

> "Any deficiency of the net surplus of tolls to pay said interest may be paid from the receipts on account of bathing at the medicinal springs belonging to the Commonwealth in said Town of Bath" (do., sec. 2).

In Section 3, it was provided that no part of the appropriation should be advanced

> "until the said Trustees shall have given bond with good security payable to the said Board [not to the Town of Bath] and approved by them for the punctual payment of interest annually on the sum advanced by the Commonwealth for the construction of said Road."

Except for the provisions of Section 3, it is not perceived how the Town of Bath or its trustees would have assumed any responsibility or liability of any kind in connection with the sums used for the construction of the road, except their faithful disbursement. It had no power to fix the tolls. The trustees were not responsible to the city for the expenditure of the money. It was not the money of the city. There is no intimation in the Act that the Town of Bath or its trustees was to return the amount the State expended or any part or it, or that indicates that the State ever expected it to be returned. In every instance where the State made a loan to which my attention has been called, specific and detailed provisions for security and repayment have been made. The Act must be read as a whole, and so reading it, the only liability assumed by the Town of Bath was to make good any deficit in interest that might exist, after exhausing for each payment, first the surplus of tolls after the payment of the "necessary expenses and repairs of the road" and second, "the receipts on account of bathing at the medicinal springs belonging to the commonwealth in the Town of Bath." That this has not been a very great burden appears from the fact that while nearly 13 years had elapsed the town had paid during that time for that deficit the sum of $750, less than 3% per annum.

It is earnestly insisted that the fact that the auditor of Virginia described this as a loan in his report, that both accountants so described it in their joint schedules and that the act is printed in the appendix under the heading "Loan to the Trustees of the Town of Bath," should be given determining weight in establishing its character as a loan. It is believed that the Act itself and not the manner in which some one has characterized, or described it, must control. It is difficult to conceive of a loan in which the sum loaned is not under some contingency to be returned, an essential element wanting in this instance. It is also difficult to conceive of the beneficial ownership of a public work the use of which the owner has no right to control. This was not an investment or a loan and comes fairly within the scope of an expenditure "within the territory now constituting the State of West Virginia" and is allowed as such.
